

NEW U.S. 4-1/4 BONDS TRADED IN ON CURB

Issue Sell at Half Point Above Subscription Price—Oils Continue Active

New York, Oct. 9.—A specially interesting feature of the trading on the curb today was the initial dealings in the new United States 4 1/4 per cent refunding bonds which were traded in at 100 1/2, a premium of 1/2 over the price at which the bonds were offered for public subscription.

Standard Oil issues continued their violent movements and were again in urgent demand, with many of those stocks selling at the highest prices ever reached. Standard Oil of New York had the widest range, moving up in the forenoon to 69 1/2, a gain of 2 1/2 points from the close on Saturday.

Many of the low-priced oil stocks were also active and strong. Seaboard selling at a new high for this movement, and there was a good demand for Midwest Texas, Gulf Oil was heavily traded in, ranging from 48 to 62 1/2.

THE BREAKING POINT

By Mary Roberts Rinehart. Author of 'Dangerous Days', 'R.', 'The Amazing Interlude', and many other striking and successful novels. Copyright, 1922, by George H. Doran Co.

WHO'S WHO IN THE STORY. DR. DAVID LIVINGSTON, chief physician in the hospital, a brilliant but blind man who shares a secret concerning Elizabeth's life.

HE GOT his hat and went out, and disappeared, watching the crowd that drifted in and out. In his state of tension he felt that the hotel clerk's words for another day, and that the Bill watched him with more than usual interest.

That part of her grief soiled, and spent itself in small comforting actions. Then she looked at the clock and bowed her mother toward the door where her mother stood with tender hands.

He got up and whistled for the dog. He took him around the block before he took him to his room. He had never before understood, in her simple and unassuming way, how she loved him, and to lose the things she loved, one by one, was harder than to go quickly from a jocular youth.

He had not told her what he knew about Jim's companion that night. She would never have understood. In her simple and unassuming way, she knew that her loss was a woman in a blue dress, and she had looked at the blessed company of heaven.

Months later, peering over the situation, Basset was to wonder, and not to know, what the woman in the blue dress had meant. The woman in the blue dress had meant, for weeks, he had it to tragic chance. Then, if she was waiting after that had brought him West. But as months went on, the part played in the tragedy by that faded woman with her tired, lined face, and her eyes that were streaked with grey, assumed other proportions, loomed large and mysterious.

There were times when he wished that some power had changed the man he could have her then and there, so he would have raised her shrill, alarming voice. By her head and no warning, he had not seen her, and a fresh white apron, raising incursive eyes to his.

"I suppose it's all right if she sits in the room," he inquired, "but I'm fighting his losing fight." "She can go in if she stays." "Right-o," said the doctor, who had been in France and had brought home some of the latest medical ideas.

Basset walked back from the hospital alone. The game was up and he knew it. Sooner or later in a way he tried to defend himself to himself. He had done his best. Two or three days ago he would have been exultant over the developments. After all, since things as one would, Clark was a murderer who had killed and paid the penalty. And the game was not up entirely, at that. The Providence which had watched over him for so long might watch over him now, and he might be able to get away.

Even then Basset's first thought was of fire. He showed his way to the hospital, and he was not allowed to go up, but he was refused. In a few minutes," said the boy, "I'll be back."
