

BONNIVELL QUILTS MOOSE OVER FAIR

Denies Resolution Opposing Ex-position Represents View of Entire Membership

LATIN AMERICA TO AID Judge Eugene C. Bonniwell, chairman of the Membership Committee of the Essequi-Centennial Association, has sent his resignation to Philadelphia Lodge, No. 54, Order of Moose, at the same time dispatching a letter to the directors of the lodge vigorously denouncing the anti-fair resolution as purporting to represent the views of the entire membership.

"I take this opportunity," said Judge Bonniwell in his letter, "to make public my contempt for an action aimed at the fair name and credit of the City of Philadelphia to serve some petty political purpose, and in doing so desire to advise you that I have forwarded my resignation from Lodge No. 54 as a protest against such action."

The Moose resolution in question, adopted at a meeting of the order last Sunday, cited five objections to the fair, and recommended that the lodge "revert its opposition to the proposed Essequi-Centennial." The lodge has a membership of 25,000, and the implication of the action was that the lodge was in a position to force the fair to a group of selfish manufacturers.

"That implication," continued Judge Bonniwell, "is false. The general membership of the Moose knew nothing whatever about this action. No notice was sent to the members of the Philadelphia lodge of an action so extraordinary and inexplicable, and no statement made by you will bear justification to any organization made up, as the Moose very largely is, of men who sell their hands."

"You know, and the public will soon realize, that the chief, if not the only, opposition to this fair is from a group of selfish manufacturers who have taken to the welfare of Philadelphia and whose sole ambition is to obtain labor at the lowest rate possible. It is a fine spectacle to make it appear that an organization of whose membership at least 22,000 belong to the working class believes in starvation wages and to see an order numerically so great make the appeal to a group of selfish manufacturers."

The following is quoted from an editorial on Wednesday in the Evening Dispatch, Philadelphia: "The fair is out after the scalp of the whole Essequi-Centennial association. The manufacturers' association of that part of the city has opened a vigorous and systematic campaign, and is distributing to business men in all parts of the city thousands of circulars setting forth the reasons why the fair should be abandoned."

"On the face of their statements the Essequi-Centennial would be a terrible calamity, indeed. It would raise rents and taxes and thus increase the cost of living. It would inflate property values and induce profiteering. It would congest the population of the city and thus aggravate insanitary conditions. It would produce a suspension of ordinary building operations, and thus cause a greater shortage of homes. Public improvements would have to be postponed, business would be lost to Philadelphia industries, and the city's traction system would be disrupted, and so on."

"Organizations of all kinds, throughout the city, are to be asked to listen to speakers of the North Philadelphia group, who will amplify the statements of these circulars and appeal for aid to ward off the peril that overhangs the city. To do so outside the thing seems decidedly overdue. World fairs have not always been brilliantly successful, and have always brought more or less of a loss to the city. In their records that they have ever wrought the ruinous devastation before which, even in imagination, the North Philadelphia are now covering and crying for help."

MICE START BLAZE

Shawing at Matches Ignites Rubbish in Rear of Ardmore Home

Miss Shawing at a box of matches started a fire in the rear of the home of Albert Miller, a Lower Merion painter, at 180 Walnut lane, Ardmore, early today.

Mrs. Almy Johnson, an elderly woman, who lives at the rear of the Miller home, saw the flames in the bushes and ran five blocks in her nightgown to the firehouse on Greenfield avenue to give the alarm.

Arrival of the fire engine awakened Miller and his wife, and aroused excitement in the neighborhood, although the blaze was confined to a box of matches into which the matches have been thrown by mistake.
