WHAT'S WHAT

By Helen Decie

VEAL is the young of the oxen, and should be a delicate pink color, firm to touch and with some fat. Veal does not contain as much nutriment as beef. The estimated food value of veal is approximately as follows: Protein, 16.0; fat, 7.9; water, 57.; ash, 9; food value per pound, 640 calories.

Veal is considered a toothsome delicacy, and the time allowance for cooking is about the same as for the cheaper cuts of beef. Veal should be well cooked, and the most desired parts are the loin and the cuttlets cut from the flank.

Lamb, the young of mutton, is also a delicacy, and is divided into two varieties, the spring or hothous lamb, and the lamb that is in season the year round, and known to the trade as yearling, the year-old sheep or lamb. To distinguish between lamb and mutton, break the second joint of the feet and if the joint shows as a saw tooth if is then a yearling or lamb. If this joint is smooth and of the usual ball-and-socket joint, the animal is older than yearing and the meat is mutton. The amproximate value of lamb and mutton is as follows: Protein, 15; fat, 22.5; water, 50.; ash, 6; food value per pound, 1000 calories.
