

HINDU VISITOR FALLS HARD FOR THE AMERICAN GIRL

Idea Mir Magbool Mahmood, Now a Guest in This City, Would Convey Is That She Is "Scrumptious"

"I protest against the aggressive hostility of America," said Mir Magbool Mahmood, a native of India and a graduate of Oxford University, who is in America in the interest of the League of Nations Union and of the Oxford International Assembly. Mr. Mahmood is the guest here of Colonel John S. Muckle, 2923 Walnut street.

"From the first moment I entered New York," said the prince with a reminiscent smile, "it has been rush, rush and rush, with very little leisure. As a complete stranger, I was wandering around in the depths of the subway trying to find a way out to my hotel, and I asked a girl for help. She said to me what sounded like 'Go to hell' and darted off. I was embarrassed, but found out later that she had said 'Go take the L.' I have been in America a month now and have formed some strong opinions."

"I have lectured in Mount Holyoke and many girls' colleges," said Mir Mahmood in his perfect Oxford English, "and I felt lost in the ocean of girls of these places. The American girl is eager for new ideas, anxious to earn the lives of other peoples. She is a most delightful companion and I have only one improvement that I could possibly suggest. That is that she is too much after the sports of men. If she must have the manly sports she should make them graceful and womanly—she should play with wings, if you know what I mean. The violin and music and paintings are finer than hockey or polo, which they tell me your girls play now."

A Girl Rhapsodist

"The American girl looks at one so differently from all others. She draws you out, and when I write a book of impressions of the American girl I shall try to define that look. However I am not going to write that book until I am just about ready to die, so this is still how to charming friends. I enjoy American dancing, though it is very different from English steps, for in England they glide and in America they hop."

Mir Mahmood is engaged to an Indian Princess, who is at present studying art in Italy.

Samuel Stokes, the brave young American and Philadelphian, is greatly respected in India. His personal sacrifice for India's cause has offered a new link of understanding between the United States of America and the United States of India. I have never met Mr. Stokes personally, but know that he is the idol of the Indian people. He is endeavoring to bring the East and the West together.

"Ghandi is the greatest man in Asia and second to none in Europe, and within three years India will be free, either with the help of England or in spite of England. The greatest trouble in my country is the frightful poverty. The maintenance of an average peasant is $9 a year, and that is more than twice poverty than you can even imagine. A great cause of this poverty is the waste of money on military and the waste of money on military expenditure is appalling."

Favors League of Nations

"I am here lecturing in favor of the League of Nations. I do not consider the League perfect—it has many weaknesses, but it is as good as could be expected in this imperfect stage of the world's development. It has great possibilities, for there are the germs of a world state in the League."

"Americans make a great mistake in pointing out to strangers the high buildings as their main pride. In New York they had nearly touched the ground trying to see the buildings pointed out, but no one thought to show the gorgeous autumn leaves or the beauties of nature which you have here more than any country I know of."

"In your press you make murders and divorces too prominent. It is wrong to feed the taste of the people the things they like. The press should try to elevate the demand of the reading public, even though they court unpopularity and do big things, but they lack grace, they are too hurried and rushed and have no leisure."

Mir Mahmood smilingly accepts his host in all his criticisms of American men—the men here, he says, are spien-

Why Great Fleets Grow From the First Stewart

"We bought the first 1/4 ton Stewart sold in Milwaukee and it is still in service. We now operate 25 Stewarts and they are real trucks."

P. J. SULLIVAN,
Pres. Sullivan's Delivery

Truck users buy Stewart after Stewart. Some operate fleets of 20, 30 or 50. In most cases they started with one. They say more for Stewart worth than all else. For instance the Eastern Massachusetts Ry. Co. now operate 53 Stewarts. Stewarts cost $200 to $800 less. Many, built 10 years ago, are still rendering good, economical service. These are some reasons for Stewart's great popularity.

From 5000 Farms

A LAND flowing with milk" is a part of the Scriptural description of the Promised Land of Canaan.

Canaan's modern counterpart is the Southeastern and Southern tier of counties in Pennsylvania, together with the counties across the Mason and Dixon line in Delaware, Maryland and over the river in West and South Jersey.

Lancaster and Chester Counties lead in fertility and smiling pastoral landscape—and their neighbors share their glory.

Acre upon acre of rich pasturage; a rolling country watered by crystal clear streams and brooklets.

A land which offers a bountiful harvest to make its thrifty land owners prosperous. An intelligent, progressive type of modern farmers maintaining herds of the finest cattle, housed in modern sanitary barns.

Smiling Nature, which furnishes the farmers' bumper crops, likewise makes his sleek, well-favored dairy herds enormous producers of rich, wholesome milk.

Truly, "a land flowing with milk"—a never-ending supply. As you gaze upon the panorama of farm after farm from a motor car or train window, each with its grazing herd, you might well wonder where the milk goes and how they dispose of it.

Close to one hundred million quarts annually comes to Supplee-Wills-Jones to serve the quarter-million or more homes which prefer GOLD MEDAL MILK.

Lancaster and Chester Counties, for example, send in a large quota. But even these two great milk-producing counties cannot supply the demand for GOLD MEDAL MILK.

Five thousand farms of the better class—where healthy, well-cared-for cattle give superior milk—are drawn upon to obtain milk sufficient in quantity and good enough in quality for the needs of this business.
