

U. OF P. EXCLUDED IN 'NATIONAL' LIST

Prof. Hart's Schedule of Great Universities Rouses Anger Protest

ONLY SIX ARE FAVORED

Undergraduate sentiment at the University of Pennsylvania has been aroused by the publication of a list of "national" universities, prepared by Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart, of Harvard. The omission of the University of Pennsylvania from Prof. Hart's list has been the subject of much criticism on the University campus.

Prof. Hart selected as the only institutions of a truly national character in the United States: Harvard, Yale, Columbia, Chicago, Cornell and Michigan. In making his selection, it is announced that Prof. Hart considered the importance of a university's influence upon American history, the adequacy of its curricula and the breadth of diffusion of its student body.

Reflecting the disapproval of the students, the Pennsylvania, the daily paper, has published a long editorial, setting forth the University's right to be included.

"Surely Prof. Hart cannot underestimate Pennsylvania's contribution to American history," says the editor, in censuring the factors named by Prof. Hart as those controlling his selection. "Pennsylvania men were ever prominent in Colonial times, and the University honored more of her sons in the Continental Congress than could any other university. It is true that during the nineteenth century Pennsylvania would not point to as many sons eminent in political life, but Prof. Hart is historian enough to know that that is but a single phase of national history. Moreover, during the greater portion of this period three of the six 'national' universities were not even in existence. As for the present, Pennsylvania can safely offer for comparison the achievements of its living alumni with those of the selected six."

First to Attain University Rank
"The adequacy of Pennsylvania's curricula seems even less open to criticism. The first American college to attain the rank of university, Pennsylvania has consistently extended her fields of study to meet the demands of the times. At the present day the University has departments in arts and science, commerce and finance, engineering, fine arts, medicine, post-graduate medicine, law, dentistry, veterinary medicine and education. But not only in this range of study extensive, but the departments comprising it are of recognized eminence. In architecture, medicine, dentistry, law and commerce Pennsylvania's fame has attained international proportions."

"While it is true that a majority of Pennsylvania's students come from within the confines of the State of Pennsylvania, nevertheless, the fact remains that in the student body there are included representatives of every State in the Union and of virtually every nation in the world."

"In view of the foregoing facts there seems little justification in the omission of Pennsylvania from the ranks of 'national' universities. In excluding the University, Prof. Hart has erred to an extent that seriously lessens any claim to merit which his classification might otherwise possess."

Eminent Argentinian to Lecture
Dr. Alejandro P. Hange, one of the leading expository authorities of Argentina, will lecture today to students of the University of Pennsylvania. The subject of his address, which will be delivered in Houston Hall at 4 o'clock, is "Argentinian's Economic and Social Development." The lecture will be given in Spanish.

Work at the University Settlement House, Twenty-sixth and Lombard streets, for the coming year will be formally opened tonight by a dinner in the home of the settlement. Hundreds of students who participate annually in the work of the settlement house will attend, as well as officials of the University Christian Association. Immediately following the dinner the workers will meet for a conference, which will be addressed by several men prominent in the settlement work of the city.

In addition to its many other courses, the settlement house has added to its curriculum this year a course in camp cooking. The new course will be of special benefit to the boys when they take weekly hikes into the country. Other courses to be given this year are apprentice work in printing, carpentry, mechanics and commercial subjects.

MRS. STOKOWSKI TALKS ON UNDERSTANDING MUSIC

Address Interesting and Illuminating on Much-Discussed Subject
Mrs. Leopold Stokowski gave the first of her one-hour talks in the Foyer of the Academy of Music yesterday afternoon to a large and appreciative audience, taking for her subject the much-discussed question of the proper understanding of music.

She began with the child and told how necessary it was to give each one an early appreciation of what good music means. Whether or not the child should be taught to play an instrument depends to a great extent upon individual aptitude and liking, but all of them should be given a chance to learn something of the beauties of the art, provided they are not tone-deaf or do not have some physical incapacity for such knowledge. It is often a mistake to insist that a child learn to make music, and this has often resulted in driving the child away from music entirely when the age of independence was reached.

It is not necessary for a person to have a technical knowledge of music to appreciate and love it, any more than it is necessary for a person to be a botanist to appreciate and love a display of flowers. All that is required is for the adult to read, listen and think. Musical history is a fascinating story and one in which every person may take great enjoyment. They should not neglect to hear good music wherever possible and to think of it, and critical appreciation will come rapidly enough.

Mrs. Stokowski spoke for modern music, urging her hearers to listen to it with a perfectly open mind and not to be prejudiced against it nor for it. All music is modern at the time of its first production. We once thought that Wagner was "terrible stuff," but we got over that, and then we considered Richard Strauss very bad, and we got over that, and so it goes with all of the really great composers. Reading, hearing and thinking will do much to cultivate in all a love for and an appreciation of this greatest of all the fine arts.
