SCENES FOLLOWING THE TRAGIC MINE DISASTER AT SPANGLER, PA. On the left is shown the temporary morgue established in the Miners' Hall, used in happier days as a dance pavilion and community gathering place. Many heart-rending scenes took place as the families of the dead miners waited outside for their turn to go in to identify their loved ones. All day, in groups of ten, silently weeping mothers and wives walked hesitatingly down the three aisles of the dead in search of sons and husbands. In the center, the grim task of loading the dead in trucks is pictured. The shaft of the Reilly Colliery No. 1, where explosion occurred, is shown on the right
