

A Husband at Last, After Years of Struggling

By WINNIFRED HARPER COOLEY
EFFIE is fifty years old. We knew her years ago in the West, when we were a child. She is an old maid in New York, and all her friends have tried to get her married. She has a microscopic income by doing all sorts of odd modern jobs, such as getting commissions on shopping for out-of-town women, and helping the society women give charity banquets, reading of a manuscript to a few of their friends, and receiving small commissions on all that she sells. Only a few old dollars are earned here, and the income derived in her own country is uncertain.

For years she has clung to the ragged edge of society, looking to rich ladies, and being thankful for an occasional treat. By being a sceptic, she has come in for motor-rides, at the last moment, or dinners at some handsome home, because the hostess' guest had disappointed her and she needed an extra woman.

Being a little sister to the rich, Effie was obliged to dress expensively, and to appear in the most fashionable places. She spent days, getting ready for a party, and then, when she had come to the party, she found that the guests were not so numerous as she had expected. She was not a very popular person, and she had to be content with a few friends. She was not a very popular person, and she had to be content with a few friends.

Mrs. Wilson Tells About Relishes

By MRS. M. A. WILSON
SEASONABLE relishes are always in demand, and I have some special relishes that will add variety and yet will not consume a great length of time in the making.

Red Cabbage Relish
Chop one small head of red cabbage fine; place in granite preserving kettle, and add:

Apple Catsup
Place in preserving kettle
Seven cups of very thick apple sauce.
One cup of cider vinegar.
One and one-half cups of brown sugar.

Please Tell Me What to Do

By CYNTHIA
Letters to Cynthia's column must be written on one side of the paper and must be signed with the writer's name. If the writer's name will not be published in the column, you may wish to indicate this by writing "Dear Cynthia" at the beginning of the letter. All letters must be addressed to Cynthia, c/o The Evening Public Ledger, Philadelphia, Pa.

Asks "Nita" if She Dances
Dear Cynthia—I am a daily reader of your column and wish you would print the words in answer to "Nita Naldi," 20.

Writes to Advise "Nita Naldi," 20
Dear Cynthia—Here is an answer for you. Nita Naldi, you are very lucky for looks, and if you would just look around good I am sure you will find a number of decent boys in this little old world.

She Wonders
Dear Cynthia—As this is the first time I have written to your most interesting column, I thought you would like to know an early reply. My problem is that I have met a young man to whom I have become engaged. He is a cripple. He has been engaged to a more beautiful girl than I am, but she has broken the engagement.

Scolds at "Saracen"
Dear Cynthia—Kindly permit me to tell you about my wonderful collection of books. I have a very nice collection of books, and I am very proud of it.

In every large city "traffic cops" are stationed to regulate the alternate passing of vehicles and of pedestrians, and to create and enforce the safety signals. In the blocks between these corner crossings, signals are inoperative, so that a man or woman who dashes across the street in the pathway of speeding motorists does so at the risk of life.

New Frocks Often Given Girdle Shower
The girdle plays an important role in present-day costuming. Apparently we are unable regarding that stuffed or twisted or rolled necessary which was launched some seasons ago, and when we reject it at the waistline we make up for its slight by adopting it at the neckline. This type of girdle is at its best on one of the straight-line, draped effects such as we have pictured today.

HER VERY OWN DRESS

Her monogram in the contrasting color which edges her pockets and cuffs in broad makes an added bit of decoration on a useful, simple street frock. At this time of year a wool costume dress like this is ideal, as it may be worn instead of a suit or with a fur coat on cold days.

All About Complexions
Dear Madam—I am a daily reader of your helpful column. Please answer the following questions for me. My friend has a very dark complexion, dark hair and eyes, and a very dark complexion. She is very beautiful, but she is very dark.

A Drunkard's Daughter Is Bitter About the Selfishness of Parents

And When They Are Like Her Father They Forfeit the Respect of the Children Whom They Expect to Serve Them
"COULDN'T you say something," begged a girl correspondent, "about the selfishness of parents? How they expect their children to do everything for them and take anything they care to give them in return?"

This girl's father is a drunkard, and her life is a hard one. In order to be loyal to him she has had to give up all her own friends, for of course it is impossible to have anybody at her house when there is always that dread of having her father come in.

Her natural pride makes her want to keep her head high, in spite of the disgrace in her home. And that makes everything much harder for her.

It is a good deal easier to bear disgrace when you don't care. You just sink down into the depths and give up all pretense of being a respected citizen.

But the girl who tries to keep herself above the sordidness of her surroundings has a longer struggle.

KEEPING up appearances is so desperately hard. It is a struggle in itself to go on looking as if nothing has happened, when all the time you are concealing something that is just about breaking your heart.

And there is a great deal in this statement of the drunkard's daughter about parents—some parents, not, fortunately, the majority.

They seem to feel that their children owe them a debt for the care and training they have received, and they expect gratitude in the price they exact for their love.

And the gratitude must be expressed in terms of service; their children must be willing and anxious to make up to them for the money they have spent and the time they have given to education.

"After all that I have done for you," this is one of their favorite remarks, uttered in wounded, martyred tones. "And look what you are! Is that gratitude for the loving kindness of your parents?"

That kind of loving kindness doesn't do much good. It is the enthusiasm of the outcasts of gratitude and service, as a rule.

THEN there's the parent whose love is so great that it falls over backward and becomes selfish. This is usually the mother who cannot bear to have her child go away from her, even for a day.

It makes her almost ill just to think of such a thing—and her behavior makes her child unhappy and nervous. But she thinks she is indicating deep mother love.

It wouldn't make any difference whether she were a mother or not, she would still have that deep love, because it is not for her children, but for herself.

She cannot bear to be without them because she wants them all to herself; their happiness is not her first thought, as it should be in the right kind of mother love; her own happiness is.

BUT then there's that third kind of selfish parent who is like the father of the girl who wrote this sad letter:

Somehow I have never lost a liking for colored handkerchiefs. Once I went in for a very "wild" variety, queer colors with dots and designs and things, but now I've gotten down to the plain colors. The other day I came across some very nice ones, there were various colors, pink, blue, yellow, lavender and some white ones, too, if your taste is more conservative, and they were but ten cents each.
