THE HOME
IN GOOD TASTE

Walls may either be decorative or used as a background to the furnishings of a room. Though decorative walls are more frequently found in ballrooms or rooms of a public character, a certain amount of decoration is permissible in smaller houses. In fact, where furniture is scant and simple walls of a decorative character are necessary; otherwise our rooms would have a look of bareness.

The easiest kind of decorative wall to manage in the ordinary home is the paneled wall, with insets of painted decorations, of fabrics, or of ornamental papers. There are a number of imported Japanese papers in gold, silver and colors which, though not intended for wall papers, may be used with good effect.

Another method of treating a wall, which is suitable in many homes, is to have a frieze above woodwork paneling, or, with an otherwise plain wall, above a strong rail set two or three feet below the ceiling.

Where it is simply a question of two or three rooms, brightly colored walls may be managed, but strong colors should be used with discretion, as they are apt to become tiresome.

Who Proved Our Muscles Have Power to Contract
Before it was known that our muscles have the power within themselves to contract it was supposed that this action was controlled by the nerves. This belief arose because it was found that when the nerves were excited the muscles did contract, hence it was only natural to guess that the nerves were the cause of the action. The difficulty was that no one had ever undertaken to dissect the human body in such a way as to find out about this faculty of the muscles.

In the sixteenth century a Belgian named Vesalius undertook the study of the human body. By dissecting those of the dead he proved that many current ideas of body structure were wrong. He wanted to make a thorough study, but unfortunately while he was one day dissecting the body of a Spanish gentleman who had just died, the on-lookers thought they saw his heart throb. They accused him of dissecting a living man and he had to flee the country to save his life.

Not until two centuries later was a careful study, with the aid of dissection, made by one who, in 1783 Alibert Hillier published his set of drawings of parts of the body, made from anatomical studies. These very accurate charts made possible the discovery of the formation and function of many parts of the body. Among these was the power of contraction of the muscles on their own account. Haller's plates were the first to show the different nerves and vessels attached in their proper positions and he added to each plate the use of the parts shown in the drawing. He made these drawings so accurate and spent so much time on each minute detail, that even with help he was not able in seventeen years to complete the description of the whole human body.

A Fable for the Fair
There was once a woman whose heart was as hot as a dragon's welling. This proving popular, she tried draping her body in an abundance of fine garments.

Of course she got a lot of candy and flowers and an engaging smile. Yet there never came a suitor who offered to endow her with his worldly goods or to take out a joint account for her at his savings bank.

Day after day her fate line kept looking more and more like a clothesline.

And the longer and more dazzling the line became the more satisfaction did the fair one get from her own reflection.

But that was the end of her satisfaction. For what she failed to get was a line on the inward reflections of her admirers. For, though they admired her beauty, they silently counted the cost of her Queen Ann effect and splendor. Moral: If you are trying to catch a man's eye, deck yourself in some clinging creation. If you want to hold a man's heart, try donning a gingham apron and creating something culinary.

Things You'll Love to Make

A Little Sealing Wax and Ribbon makes a handsome Hat Ornament.
Cut out a circle of buckram about five inches in diameter. Cut a ribbon of the chosen color into pieces three inches long. Point each piece at the top. Place some sealing wax of a color that will go well with that of the ribbon, into a shallow pan. Allow it to melt over a small flame, but do not let it get too soft. Dip the pieces of ribbon into the wax, one piece at a time, gather the straight end of each piece of the ribbon. Beginning at the center of the buckram circle, saw the ribbon petals to it. Attach them at the lower edge only. Stitch them on in circles until the outer edge is covered. This forms an attractive chrysanthemum flower-like ornament.

I heard some man talking to another man today, saying, "Say, Al, would you like to know a good way to get coal?" and the 2nd man sed, "I sure would and the first man sed, "So would I, ha ha ha."

When Manufacturers Ask How It's Possible to Sell Such Shoes as These at $5 to $6.50
then you may know the shoes are out of the ordinary. And certainly these Wanamaker standard shoes for men and women are decidedly out of the ordinary. Before we introduced them to Philadelphia we made sure they were the best manufactured in the United States at about those prices. Since we put them into our Down Stairs Store we have compared them over and over again with all sorts of "specials" and these shoes are still the best we can find in newness of style, in good leathers, in careful make and finish. They are amazing shoes and their prices are down to the pre-war level! Men's low and high shoes in four styles with rubber heels attached, all $5.
