

LLOYD GEORGE NOT AMONG 6 GREATEST

Arnold Bennett Fails to Include Former Premier in His List

Special Wireless Dispatch, Copyright, 1922 Reprinted from Public Ledger
 London, Nov. 27.—Arnold Bennett has chosen the six greatest men in the United Kingdom. His list fails to include Mr. Lloyd George or any of the naval or military heroes credited with winning the war. Mr. Bennett has his own standards of greatness. He warns the public that it does not necessarily include "greatness."
 With this preface his list of the greatest Britons is as follows:
 Bernard Shaw,
 H. G. Wells,
 Herbert H. Asquith,
 Lord Beaverbrook,
 Thomas Hardy,
 Sir Clifford Allbutt.
 Of Bernard Shaw and H. G. Wells he says: "These two deserve and will exercise a more genuine influence, a more lasting influence and a better influence not only in Great Britain but throughout the world than any other English-speaking person today. Of Asquith Bennett says: "Among leading statesmen he is a class by himself, high above Lloyd George or anybody. His prestige can not diminish." Lord Beaverbrook he includes because he is a man of tremendous individual force, an idealist who has no superior as a ruthless character or as a judge of people and their motives."

 Thomas Hardy, he stated, is "one of the most striking contemporary figures in the field of literature." And he answers the question of who is "the greatest actor, and an admirable and prolific writer."

THE DUO-ART PIANOLA-PIANO is "a revelation in its perfect tone photography," says Myra Hess.
 Every lover of piano-music should know personally the perfection of the DUO-ART. Its fidelity even surpasses the term "tone photography," since there is no reduction in sound-volume.
 Just as Paderewski, Gabilowitsch, Bauer, Hofmann, Ganz, Grainger and all the great pianists play, so is every detail of touch and tone recorded by the DUO-ART Records and reproduced by the DUO-ART Pianola-Piano, without any manipulation whatever.
 The Aeolian Company permits the DUO-ART to be built in only six renowned pianos—Steinway, Weber, Steck, Wheelock, Stroud and Aeolian, all of which we sell.
