Alfred Reginald Al'en and Mrs. Allen. of 2013 Spruce street. Major Allen was killed in the war, you remember. He was the founder of the Savoy comsany here and an instructor at the University of Pennsylvania. The Savoy company, which is composed of amateurs who give a Gilbert and Sullivan production yearly, is striving to raise a fund in his memory which will be devoted to the music school at the Uni-

Mrs. Allen gave the ten at her home and certainly Helen was as pretty as could be in her soft frock of white crepe de chine, which was embroldered in pearls and fashloned on straight, simple lines. Mrs. Allen looked extremely well in a frock of cloth of gold and gold lace combined with taupy-

TIELEN ALLEN is a graduate of Hetherington, who was introduced on Saturday evening at a dance given by ber mother, Mrs. Seth Hetherington. Betty is quite a tennis player. I hear, and good looking. She has dark brown hair and eyes and is very graceful. The party was given at the Ritz-Carlton and was really a ball, as there were more than 500 guests, several coming on from Washington, Baltimore and New York.

Betty wore a frock of white brocaded Betty were a frock of white brocaded chiffon, which was made over white satin on straight lines and fell to ankle length. An eight-inch band of white fur edged the skirt and the bateau neck of the gown was edged with pearls, which also finished the armholes, as the gown was sleeveless. The skirt was cought up allebte at which the caught up slightly at each hip in a few folds and fastened in place with a pearl ornament. In her hair was a sort of comb arran ment of white feathers and her slippers were of white brocade. Her bouquet was of gardenias and vio-

of orchids. It was altogether a beautiful affair, and flowers received by both wirls. Helen at her ten and Betty at the dance, were wonderful.

friend than a man's father? And when a sen wants to come right out and acknowledge what that father means to him by wanting him for his best man,
my hat is off to him.

The bride's gown was a lovely combination of silver cloth and silver lace, the latter made in panels on the side of the gown. Her court train was of silver cloth. Her veil was of exquisite lace and was arranged in a most unsual way, with silver wings at either side of the head.

THE other day I saw Sarah Large on Chestnut street looking very pretty. She wore a small brown felt hat bound with brown velvet and a handsome coat of a lighter shade of brown finished with a beaver collar and cuffs and with a wide band of the fur around the hem.

Sarah is the younger daughter of Mrs. Robert Large (her sister Marjorie made her debut last winter) and is still a sub-deb. This week she will be very busy, as her mother is in charge of the cafeteria at the Bazaar Houtique which epens tomorrow at the Bellevue-Stratford, and Sarah and a lot of her friends will act as waitresses.

The fair will last for four days and should be interesting. It is for the benefit of the Seamen's Church Institute and is being given by the Junior Club of that institute, of which Mrs. Gouverneur Cadwalader is president.
