the blind in Paris, took place not so long ago. It was a perfectly beautiful wedding. Nof just for the beauty that is always found at weddings, but for the spirit which was shown during the whole thing. In the first place Miss Holt, instead of turning her back completely upon the work to which she had been devoting her life, opened her arms to it and in-vited it to her wedding.

her life, opened her arms to it and in-vited it to her wedding. Instead of wedding presents she asked for checks which she could use to pur-chase the Lighthouse in Paris, which was in danger of being taken over and emptied of its inmates. She raised thousands of dollars in this way, all her friends being most generous, as much from an apprecia-tion of the touching unselfsimess of her request as from their own desire to her?
