Nancy Wynne Talks of the Forty-third Annual Charity Ball Held Last Night-She Sees Many Stunning Frocks—She Hears of Miss Richardson's Illness

TIME was when the Charity Ball return to college till after the holi-Time was when the charch led by days.

I am afraid she will have to be the chairman of the committee and one of the ladies of high degree. And every one subscribed to boxes and some Christmas parties.

every one subscribed to boxes and some people usually went to the ball for half an hour or so, because they wanted to do honor to the members of the committee, but they really were not interested in the ball.

Then about ten years ago the committee decided to make the ball a more popular event. Not only did they want people to subscribe, but they wanted them to come. And some one conceived the bright idea of opening the ball with a spectacular event which would interest the social public. The first year they invited the students of the Academy of the Fine Arts to dance and had a most stunning affair.

Christmas parties.

POLLY, who is not yet four years cold, was spending the day with grandmother. In the pantry on a high shelf there was a big tin box, and be it known that Polly knew said tin box was filled full, oh, quite full, with most delectable cookies.

Well, an opportunity came, and Polly climbed a small ladder which stood in the pantry and was standing rather wobbly, to say the least, on the top of the ladder holding a cookie in each hand, when grandmother. In a year or two the committee had an even better thought and decided to have an opening pageant in which members of the younger set and some of the younger married folk would dance. That idea was carried out with such success that the Charity Ball is now a real social event and no one would think of missing it.

pantry door and ran toward her with a cry of alarm, fearing she would fall. Polly looked calmly down upon her and remarked, as casually as she could with her mouth full of cookies: "Grandma, are you angwy or only nervous? You know, when I'm angwy I jus. put a sparkle in my eye and then get over it."

or missing it.

It's true that the subscription list is not strictly exclusive, but a very fashfonable set of people attend and the opening feature is always beautiful. The pageant before the ball proper was unusually attractive, I thought. First the lady of the moon, Mrs. James N. Anders, appeared, accompanied by Mr. Charlie Morgan, the director and author of the affair, who was re-splendent in white satin and bright hlue sequins. The planets, eight cute subdebs, came next in pretty costumes of light blue georgette and silver ribbons. and then the curtains parted to show Mrs. Percy Frazer, who was Miss Ellen Glendinning, in a wonderful butterfly costume of yellow and black taken from "Sally." Then a whole chorus from Sally." came on, the girls in Russian costumes of white, and the men in green, red and blue, also Russian. This set represented the Hahnemann Hos-

Mrs. Harrison K. Caner, Jr., of "Wily Not?" fame, then appeared as a fascinating South Sea Islander in red and green, followed by a delightful chorus from the Follies, whose dancing was perhaps the most applauded of ali. The chorus was entirely of girls, some of whom were plantation girls and others boys, in amusing costumes of every color of the rainbow. Almost the faminest readure of their costumes were lovely white spats. They did some expert eccentric dancing.
