

LOVE NOTS
By KAY KEAN

A Kiss Behind the Pout
Too many raincoats explode the broth. Yet, verily, the danger in quarrels matrimonial comes more from quality than quantity.
The love squabble that holds a recollection of tears and kisses dwelleth ever in the Garden of Eden.
As long as a husband and wife try to hide their disagreements from the gapping gossips, just so long will their love be free from the serpent.
The reason Adam and Eve argued about an apple was because there were no railroad stations, restaurants, street corners and theatres in which to display their boredom for each other.
A husband won't mind a love quarrel now and then if the boys at the club don't start twitting him about it.
Remember, there is nothing like a touch of gossip to make the whole world grin!

Advice on Beauty

TROUBLED—Sixty grains of sulphur mixed with one ounce of vaseline applied every other night to the scalp with a light massage is a fine dandruff remedy. Wash the hair frequently during the treatment.
HEFTY—The roughened condition of the skin on the upper arms is due to poor circulation. People, as a rule, are more troubled with this in winter than in summer. But if you will use a scrubbing brush and soap, scrub like everything, rinse off in warm and cold water, and rub vigorously with a coarse towel, soon the skin will be nice and smooth and velvety again.
VESTA: COLD FEET A SIGN OF poor circulation; in the fall, the one best season for walking warmly into them. Go around on tip toe for a minute or two at night. Rising up and down on toes, say twenty times, will stir up circulation. Another local help is to pour cold water on them after the warm bath and rub them vigorously. The red nose, almost always an accessory to the fact that the blood is circulating feebly, will lose its blatant color with the cold-foot cure.

The City Apartment—Hallway
In these days of intensive living, the question of the apartment as a labor saving arrangement is generally considered.
In large cities there are always to be found two definite sorts of apartments—those built originally as such, and those in houses which were once family homes and which have been remodeled. Both have advantages of their own.
The apartment house has usually a small hall with rooms opening from it on several sides. It is frequently dark and must usually be treated to give a sense of light and welcome to the incoming guest or householder, as well as to give the key in color and type of furnishing to the rooms beyond.
A dark hall must have electric light so arranged as to be decorative and practical. There must always be a table in a hallway. There may be a torchere on either side of the table, or there may be a lamp on the table and the torcheres may be in another part of the hall.
If there is room, the hallway may contain in addition a chest—old English, Italian, Colonial, or even painted, according to the style of the house. But a hall must be light, and it must be both formal in treatment and yet give a sense of friendly welcome.
