

COAL RATIONING VOTED FOR CAMDEN

Council Forbids Sale to Residents Having Ton Already in Their Cellars

SALES LIMIT IS PUT ON

An order forbidding Camden County residents to buy coal unless they can show that the supply in their bins has shrunk to one ton or less, was adopted last night at a meeting of a special committee of Camden City Council...

Another drastic regulation adopted at the meeting and to be enforced by the fuel administrator provides that not more than one ton of coal in prepared sizes shall be sold to any one consumer at any one time.

No Schools or Hospital Limit The new regulations for distribution will not include schools, hospitals and other institutions.

Others insisted that the activeness of the situation should not be underestimated and that drastic action would be the only solution to the problem.

Many Measure Bins Unless dealers are certain that they have two tons they will have to make sure of the matter through the fuel administrator, who will have the bias of the consumer's measure.

The orders adopted last night, which were in the form of resolutions, are as follows:
