AGRICULTURAL.

NEWS, FACTS AND SUGGESTIONS.

THE TEST OF THE NATIONAL WELFARE IS THE INTELLIGENCE AND PROSPERITY OF THE FARMER.

Every farmer in his annual experience discovers something of value. Write it and send it to the "Agricultural Editor of the DEMOCRAT, Bellefonte, Penn'a," that other farmers may have the benefit of it. Let communications be timely, and be sure that they are brief and well pointed.

THE REGULAR ANNUAL MEETING of the Centre County Agricultural Society for the election of officers for the ensuing year will be held in the Court House on the evening of Monday, the 26th inst. We give this timely notice that all interested may have full opportunity to be present and take part in the proceedings.

Agricultural Editor's Table.

We want every farmer in the county to take the DEMOCRAT, and will use our best efforts to make its agricultural columns so completely interesting and useful that it will, in a measure, preclude the necessity of a distinctive agricultural journal. There are, however, many farmers in Centre county who, while they take a local journal for its local news, want at least one edited and published exclusively in the interests of their business. We know of none which will better fill the bill than the Practical Farmer, published at 518 Walnut street, Philadelphia. The subscription price to the Farmer is but $2 yer year, and in clubs much less than that; and we feel safe in saying to our farmer friends that they can make no better investment of this amount of money. Having read it carefully and regularly for a number of years, we speak advisedly. It is published in Pennsylvania, and, therefore, peculiarly adapted to the needs of Pennsylvania farmers. All its departments are carefully conducted. Its contributors are men of practical experience and ability. Its letter press is clear and distinct. The portion of its space devoted to literary matter and family reading is carefully guarded from all impurity, and taking it all in all, we heartily and cordially commend it.

How Can We Make Farming Pay?

In continuation of this subject, as promised last week, we present some of the thoughts and figures of that eminently practical farmer, JOSEPH HARRIS. They are extracts from his essay on The Prospects of American Agriculture, as read before the National Agricultural Congress in 1876:

Machinery makes us far less dependent on the weather than formerly and better farming also helps us in the same direction. When I first went to Rothamstead Mr. Lawes asked me about my father's farm, the character of the soil, the rotation and yield per acre. "It is rather light land," I said, "but yields good crops, if the season is not too dry."

"I suspect," said Mr. Lawes, "that your father is not a very good farmer. There is nothing which a good farmer dreads so much as a wet season."

This was a new idea to me. I have an English foreman, and our climate is a sore trouble to him. From May till November, he is always wanting rain. "The mangles are growing surprisingly," he said, some weeks since, "but another shower of rain would help them."

"Perhaps so," I replied; "but as we cannot get rain when we want it, let us keep the cultivators going and kill the weeds."

For my part, I like our climate. But it makes no sort of difference whether we like it or not. We cannot change it. What we need to do is to study the climate and adapt our crops and our methods of cultivation and manuring to it. One thing may be safely said, that at least three-fourths of our seasons are very bad seasons for bad farmers, but good seasons for good farmers.

Take the barley crops as an illustration. In Western New York 20 bushels per acre, weighing 48 lbs. per bushel, is a good average. It probably will not average more than this the present year. And yet we have had rather an unusually favorable season; so favorable indeed, that the maltsters expect to get barley at a low figure, say 75 cents per bushel.

Now I feel safe in saying that on well-drained, well-prepared, and properly enriched soil our climate is capable of giving us an average yield of 40 bushels of barley per acre; and I think the average price of six-rowed barley is fully $1 per bushel.

I have said that 20 bushels is a fair average crop; and this is taking good and bad crops together. There are many crops which yield 30 bushels, and consequently there must be many that are not over 10 bushels. But we will take 15 bushels as the average crop of a rather indifferent farmer. He sows two bushels, and will be very apt to leave two bushels on the ground in harvesting the crop, and so, after deducting seed and scatterings in harvesting, he has 11 bushels to sell, which at 75 cents is $8.25 per acre

The good farmer has 40 bushels. He sows two bushels, and we will reckon that he loses two bushels of scatterings, though a good crop does not scatter half as much as a poor crop. This leaves 36 bushels, which, at 75c is $27 per acre, over three times as much as from the poor crop; and this, mark you, is in a good season.

Now, how is it in what we call a bad season, that is, in a season unfavorable for the growth of barley on ordinary land?

In such a season we have hundreds of farmers whose barley crops will not be over 12 bushels per acre. Deducting, as before, 2 bushels for seed and two bushels for scatterings, we have 8 bushels of merchantable barley, of rather an inferior quality, weighing perhaps, 46 lbs. to the bushel.

Owing to the unfavorable season, barley will be likely to bring $1.50 per bushel. The net returns from such a crop, therefore, will be (8 bushels of 46 lbs. at $1.50 per bushel of 48 lbs. $11.50) $11.50.

The good farmer, on well-drained, well-prepared and properly enriched land, will have, say 36 bushels per acre of 48 lbs. per bushel. Deducting 2 bushels for seed and 2 bushels for scatterings we have for sale 32 bushels at $1.50 per bushel, or $48 per acre.

* * * * * *

A careless farmer might lose half the value of the manure by leaching. But there is no necessity for this. The elements are in the manure when it leaves the animal, and we shall learn how to preserve them, and I feel sure we shall soon learn how to make them more immediately available to our crops. How to get out of our soil more of the large amount of dormant elements of plant-food which it contains, and then when we have got these elements, how best to use them and save them should be the great aim of scientific and practical agriculturists. I know of no better plan than the one I have suggested:—

1st. Draining and thorough cultivation. These operations, by letting in the air and sun, decompose and disintergrate the organic and inorganic elements of plant-food.

2d. To grow such crops as will take up the largest proportion of this plant-food from the soil and subsoil. Clover, on many soils, is one of the best plants for this purpose. Peas and beans, in favorable latitudes, are also good. Grass and oats are less valuable for the purpose, but still useful, and our grand, national cereal, Indian corn, can be used with immense advantage. But we have much to learn in regard to the peculiar requirements and uses of this magnificent crop.

3d. After we have taken up and organized into useful, nutritious food the annual supply of plant-food furnished by the soil, we have to study the best method of extracting this nutriment and turning it into meat, and at the same time save the elements of plant-food in the shape of manure for future crops.

Of course, in a paper of this kind, I cannot go into details. The crying necessity of the age is more and better meat. The better our education, the more skillful and intelligent our population; the harder we work with our brains, the more animal food we seem to require. Improved animals, like the Short-horns for instance, require richer food than Texan cattle, and bright, active, energetic men, as a rule, require, and will have, more nutritious and more easily digestible food than the slow, plodding farm laborer of the past. In all civilized countries the demand for animal food is increasing much more rapidly than the supply.

* * * * * *

I believe there are in farming as great and as many opportunities for "doing good and making money" as in any other business of life. We are apt to think that all the past discoveries and inventions have been made. We think that Bakewell, the Collings, Ollman, Jonas Webb, Hammond and others in the past have so improved on cattle and sheep that there is nothing more for us to do except to retain and perpetuate the improvement. There cannot be a greater mistake. Notwithstanding all that science and art have done, the production of flesh, meat and fat is still a very costly operation. To convert the carbon of grass and corn into the carbon of fat and butter we have at present to submit to a great loss. Even with our best breeds of cattle and sheep, our most experienced feeders have to submit to a loss of at least ninety per cent. of the albuminoids of the food. In other words if you feed a steer or a sheep a quantity of grass and grain containing 100 pounds of nitrogen, you rarely get in the growth of the animal consuming the food an amount of flesh, skin, hair and wool containg 10 lbs. of nitrogen. The other 90 lbs. are to a large extent used to "run the machine." Is there no chance for improvement here? We have the experience of the past and the science of the future to aid us. We have not to grope our way in the dark as Bakewell did. We know what we want and in what direction to look for it. Depend upon it, we shall yet have breeds of cattle, sheep, swine and poultry far superior as meat, milk and wool producers to anything the world has yet seen. There are great opportunities for the young farmer of the present and the future.
