The Soldiers' Orphans.

The reunion of the orphans of Pennsylvania, held last week in the hall of the House of Representatives, was a memorable event. It was made especially so by the grand ovation given to the War Governor of Pennsylvania, marks which fell from Gov. Curtin's lips. He was escorted to the place of the State and according to the state of the state and according to the state and a and the eloquent and patriotic remeeting by Posts 58 and 116 of the and kind stepmother—this grand commonwealth. Pure patriotism makes all Grand Army of the Republic accompanied by bands of music, and as his holy hundred and fifty soldiers' orphans and hundreds of others in attendance in the patriotic feeling of the nation a sent up a fervent shout of welcome. Immediately in the rear of the Governor was Prof. Wickersham, who for ten years filled the position of Superintendent of Orphan Schools in connection with the Superintendency of Common Schools. The president of the meeting was A. S. Grow, publisher of the made a few remarks and introduced Gov. Hoyt as the firm friend of the Gov. Hoyt as the firm friend of the soldiers' orphans, which sentiment was vigorously applauded. The Governor, referring to Ex-Governor Curtin and Professor Wickersham, said they sat here proud and exultant at the fruition of their labors. He paid a glowing of their labors. He paid a glowing ing these schools. J. N. Vannaker, a soldier's orphan and a graduate of Havard, followed Governor Hoyt. He said Governor Curtin could look over the hall and proudly say: "These are my children." Then the president introduced "the great War Governor, the founder of soldiers' orphan schools and our benefactor."

Loud and enthusiastic cheers greeted the Ex-Governor as he stepped forward to begin his address. The fol-

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: Many of you were children, and many of you may have been in this hall on a memorable occasion when the presence of three hundred and forty-five soldiers' orphan's influenced the counsels of the phan's inhuenced the counsels of the legislature and saved the schools at the most critical period of their history; and no doubt many of you were in Philadelphia, on the fourth of July, 1866, when two hundred and seventeen bullet riddled flags were returned to the State, and when the presence of more than twelve hundred soldiers' orphan's was the chief interest of that grand pageant.

The organization of the soldiers' orphans' schools was not a charity, but orpnans schools was not a charity, but a fulfillment of the covenant made between the soldiers and the people at home. Through the public journals and in speeches solemn promises were made, he said, that their wives and children should be cared for and that the latter should be maintained by the State. Their children could not be left to spasmodic and irregular charity, and it pleased Divine Providence to induce the people of the State to maintain and educate these orphans, who were not paupers but wards of the State. The purity of the work fully justified the State in standing by its agreement. No State had done as much as Pennsylva had done anything to provoke it. But when the attempt was made at the life of the government she was ahead of all States in furnishing men and money. If necessary she would have spent her last dollar and sent her last man to put down the rebellion, as she would have given her last dollar to educate and maintain her soldiers' orphans. He deprecated war, as it brought with it demoralization of the people, even if successful. The late war left its blisterng marks on public morality in the orth, although rebellion was crushed. He predicted a long era of peace, refer-red to the prosperity prevailing in the South and said that no sensible South-ern man desired the restoration of slavery. He referred pathetically to the sufferings of President Garfield, and said if they could be ameliorated by the stoppage of all business there would be silence equal to that which pervades the President's chambers. The black cloud which had settled over the White House had entered every household and fifty million people were now mourning the calamity which has be-fallen the head of the nation and praying for his restoration to health. death of the President would not affect the government, which being democratic, is immortal. If it should please Providence to remove the President a successor is provided, and no dangerous agitation would follow. This dangerous agitation would follow. This government was made to live, and the loss of its head would go no further than grieve the hearts of the people. The first and foremost duty would be, in case of the President's death, to give his successor proper support.

Our matchless constitution provides for a succession, and if the President should die, the citizen selected, and who is to become the actual head of the government, deserves, and will receive the sympathy of all true and patriotic men, in the discharge of his high official functions, in the delicate position in which he will be placed. I have said, that I trust, the war in which your fathers were slain and which made you orphans and so developed the justice and benevolence of this great State, in their adoption of you as the children of the commonwealth, may be our last. humanity friends. It is that grand and panied by bands of music, and as his tall form appeared in the hall the two desire on the part of all who love their country, to have it restored to peace, concord and fraternity. A wise and mysterious Providence has in the past visited our country with great calamities, but they have hitherto passed, and our nation has been making con-tinual progress in power and consequence, and the individual happiness and prosperity of our people has been abundantly blessed, and if the threat Lock Haven Journal and a graduate of the McCallisterville School, who Supreme Power, and by our lives de-serve prosperity in the future. I cannot commend too highly, Ladies

Burrowes, the first superin-tendent, was a man who devoted his life to the interests of public education, and who laid the foundation of the system which has been pursued by his successors. Colonel McFarlane, his immediate successor, maimed in the war as a soldier, gave to you zealous, sympathetic and active support, and it is quite unnecessary for me to refer to that learned and enlightened educator and patriotic man who is in your pres-ence to-day to take an active part in your proceedings. Indeed it would be lowing is a synopsis of the eloquent and touching words spoken on the occasion:

your proceedings. Indeed it would be quite, nnnecessary to mention the name of Dr. Wickersham; and it is a pleasing reflection that the gentleman recently called to the head of the department, comes with a reputation to justi fy the expectation that he will faithful ly discharge the delicate duties of his place towards the remnant of the Soldiers' Orphans, who still remain in the

Paul's excel-lent history of the Soldiers' Orphans' Schools of Pennsylvania may be re-written and enlarged by that gentle-man, or some other person equally man, or some other person equally competent for such duty, so that not only the people of other States of this Union, but that all the nations of the earth, and all humanity may know how much Pennsylvania did to relieve the sufferings and horrors of war, and the sufferings and norrors of war, and that her example may be imitated. However it may be with you, Ladies and Gentlemen, I will go back to my home, with most agreeable impressions and memories of this meeting, and wishing you all individual happiness and prosperity in the future—say farcand prosperity in the future—say fare expenses, $1,359,330; increased net earnings, $1,091.113. This same story will be told by all the leading railroads, and is the best answer that can be made to the alarmists and speculators who have been trying to create an uneasy feeling and bear all kinds of securities. There is more or less fear that the President's death may be followed by financial disturbances, but there is no reason for it. Nothing will be disturbed if that un-happy event takes place. The railroads happy event takes place. The ramous never did so well as they are doing this summer, and if people would only calmly consider the question, they would see why this is inevitable. The would see why this is inevitable. The country is highly prosperous. Business is more or less brisk, notwithstanding we are in the dog days. The railroads are offered more traffic than they can well dispose of, and notwithstanding the war about which so much has been said, they will all show heavy increased earnings.

The President's Mother.

A VISIT TO ONE OF THE GOOD OLD PIONEERS OF OHIO.

Mrs. William M. Taylor in the Newcastle Courant.

In the quiet little village of Hiram, Ohio, I had the pleasure of spending several hours with Mrs. Garfield, the aged mother of the President, a jovial, fresh faced lady of over eighty years, who still walks as spry as a girl. Our gifted President must have inherited much of his marvelous energy from his little mother, whose kindly, resolute face is only a more delicate type of the rugged features of her statesman son.

With much vivacity she told us of earlier days, when left a widow with four little children, her pioneer neighbors offered to make a "bee" and split rails for fencing her land. But when these helpers found that this staunch young temperance matron would not young temperance matron would not furnish them whiskey, according to the custom then, they all quit their work, leaving the logs only quartered. But, true to her principles and nothing daunted, the grand little woman herself took up the maul and alone split sixty rails. She says: "Every time I lifted the maul, it was so heavy and I so slender, its weight nearly pulled me backward." "Are you not proud to think of it now?" asked her aged sister, Mrs. Boynton. "Oh," answered Mrs. Garfield, "I am ashamed to think that men were ever such slaves to walked three miles to church, taking off her shoes and stockings to wade the Chagrin river, which ran between house and the meeting house. With tears in her eyes she told us of every evening reading the Bible with her youngest son, and said he always was a od boy. When I told her that Mr. Taylor was now visiting the Indian Territory she spoke of the interest she and her sons had always felt in the poor Indians, and that James from a child was always eager to take the part of the weak and the oppressed.

she loves this son-her "baby, as she twice called him. With what gratified pride she refers to Gladstone's sympathetic letter to the President's wife. Mrs. Dr. Boynton, who is present, speaks of a letter from her husband, in Washington, which tells of the Presi-dent's extreme weakness after the last surgical operation; but this brave mother of a brave son said in answer: "My son will live. God will raise him up, for his work is not yet done."

Southern Sympathy With Mr. Garfield.

To the Editor of the Washington Post.

I cannot resist the temptation to send you an extract taken from the Marion | ed every object consumable. county, Ga., Argus, and copied into the Atlanta Constitution, of the date of Au-gust 20. I find that the sentiment of this extract prevails all over the South where I have been: "A few nights ago where I have been: "A few hights ago a family in this place, while preparing for rest, was speaking of Garfield. A little boy nine years old took part.
After rising from his evening prayer,
he said in whispered tones: 'I hope
God will cure President Garfield.' As he jumped upon the bed he asked: 'Father, do you think Mr. Garfield will get well?' 'I hope he will, don't you?' Oh, how many prayers go up to Heaven day and night from the wayside drawing room and the bed chamber for the ing room and the bed chamber for the recovery of our wounded President. They are not loud and long, but short, earnest and silent, and more acceptable. How often 'Lord bless our wounded President!' O God, restore Mr. Garfield and bless his family!' are car ried to Heaven with an earnest sigh, God only knows.

These Southern people, with all of their faults and shortcomings (and I have been raised to believe that they have many) are in no wise tainted with hypocrisy. On the railroad trains, at hypocrisy. On the railroad trains, at the hotel, in their stores and private dwellings, you hear nothing but the sincerest sympathy for Mr. Garfield, and if Southern sentiment should pre-vail Guiteau would not live an hour after the President dies. I was raised North, and am a "Repuplican of Re publicans," and love my party, but my eyes have been opened as to the Southern people's temper and disposition by a few weeks' sojourn South. I hope you will copy the extract into your paper.

WOMAN WITH TWO HEADS AND FOUR

According to the New York Evening Telegram, a woman having two heads and four arms is being exhibited at the corner of Broadway and Ninth streets, New York. The other portion of the body is the same as that of an ordinary person, while the heads are like two different individuals. Both speak five different languages. They convere with different individuals upon different subjects, and often in different languages. When both heads are spoken to they reply together, not always using the same words, but aiways conveying the same thought. They claim to have the ARMS. State had done as much as Pennsylvania for its soldiers' orphans, and no nation, ancient or modern, had equaled her in this respect. The State, in her treatment of the soldier's orphan, stands beyond and above all precedent. She is a noble and grand old State and her people are highly patriotic, and he had no doubt the soldiers' orphans here illustrate by their lives that the State did but its duty in creating their schools to the memory of their fathers. He thought this was a proper time and an appropriate place to say that this ought to be our last war. Referring to the rebellion he said Pennsylvania never

To address her is a difficult task, as one feels uncertain to call her she, they or it. fact, the two headed lady is decid a poser to every one but herself.
