MICHIGAN'S MISFORTUNE.

Raging Forest Fires-Nine Villages Burned Between two and three hundred lives lost.

DETROIT, September 9.—A dispatch from Port Austin, at the head of Burnet peninsula, sums up the general de-struction as follows: The loss of lives by the forest fires on Monday and Tuesday is estimated at from 200 to 300, and day is estimated at from 200 to 300, and the following villages were burned: Bad Axe, Merona, Forest Bay, Richmondville and Sandusky. The following were partly burned: Port Hope, Linden and Elby. The great loss in the villages is nothing to that in the country, where the losses are too numerous to be named.

REPORTS FROM VARIOUS OTHER COUNTIES.

Reports from Saginaw, Tuscola and Laper counties, one tier back from the lake, while showing much destruction of property do not approach the losses in the shore counties. The loss by fire was much less sweeping and general and the loss of life was small, but on each side of these more favorable coun-ties hundreds of thousand of dollars worth of property has been destroyed. The latest reports from all these counties encourage that rain has visited many of the sections and that the del-uge of flame is largely subsiding. The work of immediate relief must now be systematically enteredupon. The lumber to build houses, provision of all kinds, clothing and seed for future crops must be furnished in large quantities to prevent still greater destitution. The benevolent societies can safely send money to E. Carleton, mayor of Port Huron, or to Senator O. D. Conger in the same place with the assurance that the means will be judiciously used. Prompt action is urgently demanded.

CHCAGO, September 14.—The Rev. Z.
Grenell, Jr., pastor of the First Baptist church of Detroit, has arrived in that city from Sand Beach by the Narrow Guage and Grand Trunk, passing through most of the burned region in Samilac county. He gave a reporter a graphic and fearful description of the calamity as he saw it and heard of it from eye-witnesses. On his way to Port Huron by the Narrow Gauge railroad it was noticed that in some places the track had been an effectual barrier to the flames, which did not find fuel in the flames, which did not find fuel in the gravel of the road bed. In other places, however, it burned the ties and places, howe, twisted and descroyed
had to be replaced. In other place had leaped clear over the road and taken a new start on the other side.
For the most part, it got across in some way, and the spots of unburat country were small, few and far between. From the car windows, all the way, it presented to the view the aspect of a burned desert of ashes and smouldering embars, without a sign of animal or vegehars, without a sign of animal or vegehars, without a sign of animal or vegehars without a sign of animal or vegehard was impossible

The scenes of horror in the woods The scenes of horror in the woods were too frightful for any pen to portray. The dead were found everywhere, very rarely recognizable, and in most cases undistinguishable as human beings. Many were mere masses of burnt flesh, which fell apart when touched, and in a very few could sex or age be distinguished. From one body the head fell when it was lifted up; from another, that of a young woman, the leg sepdistinguished. From one body the head fell when it was lifted up; from another, that of a young woman, the leg separated and hung suspended by the tendons. In some places families were found reduced to an undistinguishable heap of roasted and blackened blocks of flesh where they fell together, overwhelmed by the rushing flames. The manifold horrors of the calamity were multiplied by fearful tornadoes, which cut off retreat in every direction. The awful heat of the atmosphere raised the smoke a little from the ground, and it hung above the earth in an impenetrable mass, shutting out every ray of light and leaving the poor creatures below, helpless and blind, until the fire caught them and closed their agony in death. Now and then flames shot up in tremendous masses, which would be spized by a tornado and carried bodily, a quarter of a mile away and then plaked down again to start the flames in a nege.

Among the persons burned out who have come to destroit to get relief for the sufferers is Joha Bollantyne, of Verona Mills. Ir an interview he told for the sufferers is Joha Bollantyne, of Verona Mills. Ir an interview he told the following story: "On Monday morn-"

The Centre Jemocrat.

Ing last it was as pleasant at Verona Mills as it is this morning here. We had no more apprehension of danger by fire in our locality than you apparently have here to-day. But about 12 o'clock a dense smoke began to blow out toward the lake and a terrible wind began to arise. A number of us went began to arise. A number of us went back into the woods to investigate. We back into the woods to investigate. We soon found what was the matter, and, hurrying back, I told my family that we were going to be burned out—that it was impossible to save anything. It was not more than twenty minutes before a cloud of smoke enveloped us and we were left in total darkness. Those who could flee to a place of refuge did so. I and my family started to go, but were caught by the flames before we had gone more than fifteen or twenty rods. We managed to get into a corn field, and remained there from about 1 field, and remained there from about 1 o'clock in the afternoon till 3 next morning, nearly suffocated and unable to see anything about us. It was a perfect mass of blackness. After the fire swept over it almost everything was gone. Here and there was a farm dwelling yet standing. Nearly all the stock, cattle, sheep and horses were killed, and we saw them lying by the roadside. The people were left almost entirely destitute of clothing and provisies. visions. In one instance that I know of fifty pounds of flour were all the provisions that could be obtained for seventy five people. In another place there were one hundred and four people left with about the same amount of flour. There was no meat or provision of any kind. I owned a saw mill and of any kind. I owned a can flouring mill, and the consequence was that records began to come in from all flouring mill, and the consequence was that people began to come in from all about there to appeal to me for aid. As soon as possible I came away and sent them some relief from Sand Beach. From there I came down, telling them I would see what could be done. As I was leaving that day they had found fifty-eight bodies. I have not been able to learn the details of the loss of life in the town of Paris, but the report is that there was a great number."

> from the smoke that he could not see to harness them; besides the smoke blinded the eyes and oppressed the lungs. He got the horses harnessed to the wagon; then he went into the barn for a neck yoke, and when he came out he could not find the wagon and team. For a minute or two he had to feel about for them like a blind man. Then he went into the house and carried his wife out on her bed, bed and all, and put her in the wagon. The children got in and a girl of fifteen drove the team off three miles, in the darkness team off three miles, in the darkness and blinding smoke, over a bad road, with trees falling and horses perfectly frantic with terror. How she did it she hardly knows. The man being left behind, to make a last effort to start his cattle, escaped on foot. Before he left the barn and farm were literally covered with flying cinders, the glass of the windows broke with the heat, the bellowing, moaning cattle gathered tobellowing, moaning cattle gathered to-gether and staggered aimlessly about, and as he got into the road the buildings, fences, stacks—the whole place—burst into flames, which made an awful yellow glare in the smoke. With all this the wind blew with frightful violence and varying gusts; sometimes the smoke settled down about him in dense darkness, so that he staggered from suf-focation. Then the smoke would rise before a gust of air, and an awful blistering heat took the place of the smoke. The woods along the road took fire behind on each side and in front of him. but he got through safely, happy to find that the wagon with his family had successfully preceded him.

The dence smoke made it dark as night in the daytime and awful in the night, but the roads were the only paths of safety. One man riding toward the fire, found it suddenly behind him, and and her legs singed; their two children which they were trying to save, were dead. Probably a number of parents could have saved their own lives, but they died in trying to save their children. The awful fury of the fire is shown in its effects upon the earth. In places, the soil is extually hyprody to places the soil is actually burned to a depth of several inches. Acres and acres of land have been divested of every living thing, clear down to the very roots in the ground, leaving the country as here as a desert and strewn with ashes. In many cases one cannot tell by the looks the difference between a ploughed field and one on which there was a dense wood. There are square miles of land already for the plough, cleared as thoroughly as if years of labor had been expended upon them. And there are other square miles where portion of Sanilac county, a distance of sixty miles. Hundreds of square miles of territory were burned over, and the number of the destitute reaches thousands. The townships in Huron county bordering on Saginaw bay seem to have got off most lightly, but the central and eastern townships suffered heavily. Some of the shore villages escaped, but others received a severe scorching and of some there is scarcely a vestige left. Reports have been received showing that every township in Sanilac county suffered more or less injury. The whole interior of the county has been laid waste, while the townships in Tuscola bordering the received several states of the county has been laid waste, while the townships in Tuscola waste, while the townships in Tuscola bordering thereon have sustained severe losses. The three ccunties of Huron, Sanilac and Tuscola were ravaged by the great fires of 1871, but the losses then, great as they were, do not equal those occasioned by the fires of this week. The three counties named had, in round numbers, a population in 1870 of 37,000, and in 1880 of 72,000. They have therefore doubled in population since the destructive fires of ten years ago, while as respects their agricultural ago, while as respects their agricultural development, the rate of increase was much larger. The loss will reach hundreds of thousands of dollars, and, next to the loss of life, the saddest feature is that it deprives hundreds of all means of sustances. means of sustenance.

THE resolution of the stalwart con vention on President Garfield is a mos vention on President Garneld is a most curious performance in a literary as well as political point of view. We again print the resolution; "That to President James A. Garfield,

It leaks out of the committee on platform that the first part of this re-markable resolution was drawn up by the tender and sympathetic Senator Cooper of Delaware, whose affection for President Garfield is well understood. The latter half of the resolution down from the semi colon, is by the fine hand from the semi colon is by the fine hand of the Hon. Edward McPherson. Mr. McPherson's malevolent purpose to wards the stalwarts struggle through the ill constructed septence which he succeeded in dove tailing upon the res olution of Senator Cooper. In this sen tence the stalwart Republicans of Pennsylvania are made declare that President Garfield is the victim of "an undeserved assault upon him for a conscientious assault upon him for a conscientious exercise of proper executive power."
What was this exercise of executive power but the appointment of Collector Robertson? Who made this assault upon the President but ex-Senator Conkling and the stalwarts? The malignant but indirect purpose of the resolution is to hold Conkling and the stalwarts responsible for the bullet of the assassin or else the resolution has the assassin, or else the resolution has no meaning at all. Mr. McPherson is not in the habit of using words without a purpose. The ring managers were so intent on the practical business of the intent on the practical business of the convention that they gave themselves no concern about a mere formal declaration of sympathy; and by their neglect they have permitted Mr. McPherson to send abroad as their act a vindictive resolution associating the stalwarts with finitess, as the respective product of the stalwarts with finitess.
