President Garfield Dead.

He Dies at 10.35 on Monday Night.

THE OFFICIAL BULLETINS.

Sketch of the Life of the Deceas ed President.

Vice President Arthur takes the Oath of Office as President.

After weeks of the most agonizing suffering, borne with sublime heroism and fortitude, during which earnest hope for his recovery and dread fear of a fatal end alternately predominated in the thoughts of a sympathizing people, the "inevitable hour" that sooner or later dooms all mankind came to President Garfield on Monday night. His death occurred at 10:35 in the evening and was announced by telegraph to the country at twenty minutes later than that hour. In this way the bullet of a miserable and atrocious miscreant at last accomplished its deadly purpose, and to-day a great burden of sorrow and grief rests upon the nation for the fall of its chosen head.

For a number of days before the fatal hour arrived almost every word that reached the public from Elberon was gloomy and discouraging. Even the most sanguine were at last with extreme reluctance forced to yield their hopes and anticipations before the obvious and inexorable fact that in the President's case nature could no longer assert her powers of recuperation; that all the resources of medical science and skill had been exhausted, and that it was not possible for this wasted and blood-poisoned body to hold life for many hours longer.

Thus the end came, not unexpectedly, it is true, and yet the calamity is none the less grievous and mournful.

We can recall but few incidents in the public life of President Garfield that could inspire any reasonable man with a lasting personal dislike to him; certainly there never was anything to provoke the cruel and bloody deed which brought to a close his honorable and exalted career. The blow may therefore be said to affect every American citizen interested in the welfare of our institutions and the perpetuity of our government. It seems like a personal bereavement to every one; it touches every heart and carries sorrow and mourning into every household in the land.

In the presence of this dire affliction it becomes the people to bow in submissive humility to the will of the Great Master who rules the Universe, Great Master who rules the Universe, and who does all things well; relying in full faith upon His wisdom and mercy to lead us safely through all troubles and difficulties that may come to be safely through all troubles and difficulties that may come to be safely through all the President was sinking. After death had been pronounced the body was properly arrayed by Dr. S. V. Boynton. Telegrams were immediately sent to be president and the president was not a murmur heard while the President was sinking. upon us as a nation. The following are the dispatches which tell the sad story of the President's death:

THE NEWS.

ELBERON, N. J., September 19.—The President died at 10:35 p. m. From what can be ascertained his death was from sheer exhaustion. Mr. Warren Young, assistant to Private Secretary Young, assistant to Private Secretary Brown, brought the news from the cottage at 10:50 o'clock. The first indication that anything serious had occurred was the appearance of a messenger at the Elb. on Hotel, who obtained a carriage and drove rapidly off. It is supposed he had gone to summon the members of the Cabinet, who left here about 9:30 to-night. about 9: 30 to-night, conditions were then promising for a quiet night. The doctor asked the President if he was feeling uncomfortable in any way, and the President answered, 'Not at all,' and shortly after fell asleep. Dr. Bliss then returned to his room, across the hall from that occupied by the President, and Colonels Swaim and Rockwell remained with the President. About fifteen minutes after President. About fifteen minutes after 10 the President awakened and remarked to Colonel Swaim that he was suffering great pain, and placed his hand over his heart. Dr. Bliss was summoned, and when he entered the room found the President substantially room found the President substantially without pulse and that the action of the President's heart was almost indistinguishable. He said at once that the President was dying and directed that Mrs. Garfield be called and also the doctors. The President remained in a dying condition until 10:35 when he was pronounced dead. He died of some trouble of the heart, supposed to be neuralgia, but that of course, is uncertain. I notified General Arthur and sent a dispatch to Blaine and Lincoln who are en route from Boston to New York. The Cabinet, now at 11: 30 P. M., s in consultation."

Long Branch, N. J., September 20—1:25 a.m.—Attorney General MacVeagh has just sent the following to Vice President Arthur: It becomes our painful duty to inform you of the death of President Garfield and to advise you to take the oath of office as President of the United States without delay. If it concurs with your judgment we will be very glad if you will come here on the earliest train in the morning. earliest train in the morning.

S. J. Kirkwood, Secretary of the Interior. Elberon, September 20-1:15 A. M. The following official bulletin has just been issued: "Elberon, September 19— 11:30 p. m.—The President died at 10:35 P. M. After the bulletin was issued at 5:30 this evening the President continued in much the same dent continued in much the same condition as during the afternoon, the pulse varying from 102 to 106, with rather increased force and volume. After taking some nourishment he fell into a quiet sleep. About thirty-five minutes before his death and while asleep his pulse rose to 120 and was somewhat more feeble. At ten minutes after 10 c/clock he awoke complaining after 10 o'clock he awoke complaining of a severe pain over the region of the heart, and almost immediately became unconscious and ceased to breathe at 10:35."

D. W. BLISS, D. H. AGNEW, [Signed.] F. H. HAMILTON. ELBERON, N. J., September 20 .- The Cabinet at this hour, I A. M., is still in ession at the Francklyn Cottage. Long Branch, N. J., September 20.— Previous to his death the only words spoken by the President were that he had a severe pain in his heart. It is supposed by the surgeons that death was occasioned by a clot of blood forming on the heart. Dr. Bliss was the first one notified of the President's expresion of the president of the pres sion of pain and upon entering the room he at once saw that the end was near, and the members of the family were immediately summoned to the bedside. All arrived and perfect quiet prevailed. Mrs. Garfield here the trying ordeal with great hibited unprecedented with a second to be a secon gave way to no paroxysmith grief and after death became evider, she quietly withdrew to her own room. There she sat, a heart-broken widow, full of grief, but with too much Christian courage to exhibit it to those around her. course was laboring under a terrible strain and despite her efforts tears flowed from her eyes and her lips became drawn by her noble attempt to bear the burden with which she had been afflicted. Miss Mollie was naturally affected and bursts of tears flowed from the child's eyes, notwithstanding her noble efforts to follow the example of her mother. The death seems one never to the President's mother, in Ohio, and to the sons, Harry and James, who are now at Wilfiams College, as also to Vice President Arthur and many prominent public men. SKETCH OF HIS LIFE.

James A. Garfield, son of Hiram and Eliza Garfield, was born in Orange, Cuy-ahoga county, Ohio, November 19, 1831. ahoga county, Ohio, November 19, 1831. His parents were poor and his father died while the subject of this sketch, was very young. Thrown upon his own resources while a mere child he soon developed those traits of character which made him a leader among his fellows and pointed him out at last as eminently qualified for the high office to which the suffrages of his countrymen called him. His early years were spent on the farm and on the canal, and much of his education was self-obmembers of the Cablinet, who left here about 9: 30 to-night.

army, and without solicitation on his part, he had been elected to Congress from the old Giddings district (the Nineteenth), in which he resided, be-lieving that his path of usefulness lay in the direction to which his constituents pointed, he resigned his commission December 5, 1863, and entered upon the duties of a statesman's life. In Congress he at once took a high rank. and from his admission to the House of Representatives to his elevation to the Presidency, he was an active, energetic hard worker. He first served on the committee on military affairs, where, by his activity, industry and familiarity with the wants of the army, he did as signal service as he could have done in the field. He soon became known as a powerful speaker, remarkably ready, and always effective in debate, while in the committees he proved himself an invaluable worker. His party renominated him by acclamation on the expiration of his term, and on his return to the House he was given a leading place the House he was given a leading place on its leading committee on ways and means. Here he soon rose to great in-fluence. He studied the whole range of financial questions with the assiduity of his college days, s. that he was looked upon as one of the ablest of our national financiers. He stood by his party and his party stood by him, re-electing him successively to the Thirty-ninth, Fortieth, Forty-first, Forty-second, Forty-third, Forty-first, Forty ty-third, Forty-fourth, Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses. During these several terms he served as chairman of the committee on military affairs, of the committee on banking and currency and of the appropriations commit-tee. This last chairmanship he held until 1875, when the Democrats came into power. Two years later, when James G. Blaine went to the Senate, General Garfield became, by common consent, the Republican leader in the House. In January, 1880, he was elected to the Senate to fill the seat of Allen G. Thurman, who retired on the fourth G. Thurman, who retired on the fourth of March. He received the unanimous vote of the Republican caucus for this position, an honor never conferred before on any man by any party in the State of Ohio.

NOMINATED FOR THE PRESIDENCY. On the eighth of July, 1880, General Garfield was chosen the candidate of the Republican party for the presidency of the United States. He was nominated upon the thirty fourth ballot, after a prolonged struggle, and Chester A. Arthur was placed upon the ticket with him as the nominee for the vice presidency. In the following November the ticket was electid and on the fourth of March of the present year Garfield entered upon his duties as the chief magistrate of the nation.

The details of the difficulty which soon followed, in which Senator Conkling was arrayed against the President, are familiar to all. The President removed from the New York custom house, General Merritt, and appointed ludge Robertson to the resition. This Judge Robertson to the position. This excited the indignation of Mr. Conk ling, Robertson being recognized as his enemy and after the lapse of a brief period both Conkling and Platt resigned from the Senate and made an appeal ed from the Senate and made an appear for re election to the New York assem-bly. Their appeal gave rise to a pro-longed struggle, which finally resulted in the election of Messrs. Lapham and Miller as the successors of Messrs. Conkling and Platt.
