

Anecdotes of Judge Black.

As an illustration of the wonderful oratorical powers of Judge Black, an Erie gentleman who was acquainted with all the parties concerned tells the following interesting anecdote:

During the administration of Gov. Bigler Henry L. Dieffenbach was Superintendent of Public Schools and he and Judge Black were very intimate friends. One summer day Gov. Dodge, of Iowa, a prominent man at that time, being on his way home from Washington, stopped off at Harrisburg and walked up to the capital grounds to pay Supt. Dieffenbach a visit. While the two were seated near a window in conversation a voice was heard calling from the walk below:

"Dieffenbach!"

The superintendent looked out and the voice continued: "Say, throw me down a chew of tobacco."

A generous chew was cut off, wrapped up in a piece of paper and thrown out. As the party walked away Gen. Dodge got a good view of him. He was a large plain looking man carelessly dressed, and was in the act of throwing the paper away after having put the tobacco into his mouth.

"Who is that man?" asked the General, when the figure had gotten far enough away as not to overhear.

"That is our Chief Justice, Jeremiah S. Black," was the reply.

Gen. Dodge took another look at the retiring form and said: "Well, you must be pretty hard up for Chief Justices in this State."

"I'll introduce you to him the first chance I get," replied Dieffenbach in his quiet way, "and see what you think of him."

Shortly after this the two went to what is now the Bolton house for supper. After the meal, they were sitting in the reading room, when Judge Black came along and Gen. Dodge was introduced to him. Dieffenbach left the two together and went away. Before returning, however, he looked around for his guest; but not finding him, he went to bed. The next morning, getting up rather earlier than usual, about six o'clock, he was astonished to find Gen. Dodge pacing up and down the floor of the reading room.

"General you're an early riser," said he.

The General replied with the greatest enthusiasm depicted on his countenance:

"That Chief Justice of yours is the greatest man I ever met. Why, do you know, I've been up all night talking with him and time passed so rapidly we didn't notice it till daylight."

Other anecdotes of the eminent jurist are published from which we give the following:

One day Judge Black was surrounded by a bevy of his personal friends on the floor of the House, among the rest Judge Mercer, then the Bradford Congressman, who turned to him and said: "Judge Black, you have more friends on this side of the House than on your own. You ought to be a Republican. If you would join us we would appreciate you and give you due prominence." To which Judge Black made reply that he knew it all to be true; the Republicans were good fellows; he would like to belong to them, and there was only one thing in the way. "If," said he, "there were no hereafter I would join the Republican party at once. Nothing deters me but the fear of hell."

The Origin of the American Flag.

At Little Brington, a village near Northampton, England, is an old cottage in which lived the ancestors of George Washington. It is a neat old place, but with nothing remarkable about it, save it was the nest of the General's great forefathers. Above the entrance door, incised on a stone slab, is the following: "The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away. Blessed be the name of the Lord. Constructus, 1606." Great Brington lies some couple of miles from the smaller village of that name, where is Washington Cottage. At Great Brington there is a handsome church, remarkable for the very complete and perfect series of monuments of the family of Spencer. Still more interesting, however, than these monuments to the ancestors of Lord Spencer are the two plain slabs that cover the bones of George Washington's ancestors. The oldest of these is that with an inscription on it to the memory of Lawrence Washington deceased in 1619, leaving behind him eight sons and nine daughters. Two of Lawrence's children migrated to America; from one of these George Washington was descended. The other inscription is engraved on brass, beneath the Washington coat-of-arms, as follows: "Here lies ye body of Eliz Washington, Widow, who changed this life for Immortality ye 19th of March 1622: as also ye body of Robert Washington, gent., her late husband, second sonne of Robert Washington of Solgrove, in ye county of North., Esq., who depd. this life ye 10th March 1622, after they lived lovingly together." We here see the origin of the American "star spangled banner," and of the stripes, for the coat-of-arms on this old brass appear three stars, with the bars or stripes beneath them. The sexton told me that

Charles Sumner had had a copy of the larger slab made by the local mason, and that both he and Motley, the historian, had taken great interest in these arms and inscriptions. It is certainly striking to see these humble mementoes of the ancestry of one of whom all English-speaking people are proud, in this old country church, lying near the splendid tombs of forgotten magnates. An interesting chapter might be written on the origin of the great flags of the world. To trace them back to their sources would often be no easy task; but that of the American Republic lies on the floor of Brington Church.

Peach Packing at Baltimore.

Some facts about a large and profitable business.

From the Baltimore American.

Peach packing is peculiar to Baltimore, and it would seem as if nature had intended the eastern shore of Maryland and Delaware to have almost the exclusive privilege of producing this fruit. The only other section east of the Rocky mountains, where they grew to any great quantity was the country around Lake Erie, but of late years the trees have nearly all been destroyed by the "yellow." In this city, they will not be at all numerous, because more of them will be shipped away than has been customary and the railroads have made arrangements to send them to greater distances than ever before. The railroad companies themselves have been anxious to have a finger in the pie, and which that object have bought up whole orchards of growing fruit. More peaches will also be reserved to be "evaporated," as the process is called. It is vastly superior to drying them. By its process the fruit is put into "evaporators," which drive off most of the moisture, and leaves it without affecting the flavor, and without imparting any bitterness or toughness. It is rapidly growing in favor, and will probably revolutionize the whole fruit business. The crop of evaporated peaches this year amounts to two million pounds. Unpared or evaporated peaches being sixteen or seventeen cents per pound, and sun dried six or six and a half cents per pound. Good use is found for the re use of packing houses. The parings are regularly bought at so-called distilleries, to be distilled into peach brandy. The kernels are used by confectioners, and the stones make excellent fuel. In making the cans, not even the smallest scraps of tin are wasted. If they are too small to be used for any other purpose, they are sold at 83 per ton for sash weights.

Alcohol as a Medicine.

The Non-Alcoholic Treatment of Diseases—A Physician's Opinion.

The Herald of Health, of New York city, prints a very suggestive article entitled "Substitutes for Brandy," by Dr. Ridge, of London who has had large experience in the non-alcoholic treatment of disease in connection with the London temperance hospital, in which, referring to the profound conviction in the public mind, including, also, the medical profession, that spirits, and especially brandy, are of great value in many diseases, both chronic and acute, he affirms that "in effect, other things being equal, a person has a better chance of recovery without alcohol than with it." He also says: "One of the most easily remembered rules is that when a substitute is required for brandy as a narcotic, apply warmth externally; when for brandy as a so-called stimulant, give hot drinks internally." He adds: "As a stimulant pure and simple there is nothing acts so rapidly and powerfully as hot water, milk and water, tea, etc., or non-alcoholic peppermint, or ginger in hot water." The article, as a whole, is timely and valuable, and will help many, even of temperance people, to feel that they can safely dispense with alcohol, even as a remedial agent in sickness. De-throned in this particular, alcohol may then be much more readily and effectually banished as a beverage from the sideboard and the saloon.

Scarlet Fever.

How to Cope with the Dreaded Disease—Its Prevention and Cure.

From the Philadelphia Record.

An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. In no way is the wisdom of prevention more apparent than in dealing with disease. In these advanced days of medical science physicians are giving as much attention to the prevention of disease as to its treatment. It is with this end in view that they urge the importance of sanitary measures—the necessity of proper ventilation, perfect drainage, wholesome food and judicious clothing. But particularly are their efforts directed to the repression of contagious diseases, and especially to those which are incident to childhood. Among these none is so much dreaded as scarlet fever, and justly, too, for none of the eruptive diseases is so fatal in its results. It is, then, desirable that every one should know how best to check its progress, and that they should faithfully and conscientiously make use of such knowledge for the protection of humanity. A writer in a foreign newspaper gives some rules calculated to limit the spread of scarlet fever, which appear to be reasonable. Moreover, their application is simple, and may be carried out in the poorest house. His theory is to disinfect the patient instead of waiting until the bed, carpets, clothing and surrounding air are impregnated with the germs of disease. He says that first the congested skin should be kept soft and pliant, and should be soothed with warm baths. Bathing the child in water of a temperature of ninety degrees is recommended, which tends to cool the feverish skin and predisposes to sleep. At the same time it washes away the loose particles of skin, and prevents too free peeling by moistening the surface. After the bath a medicated ointment should be gently rubbed over the entire body. This lessens the production of scales and at the same time renders harmless those which form. As a formula for compounding the ointment best suited for this purpose, he offers the following: Thirty grains of carbolic acid, ten grains of thymol, one drachm of vaseline, and as much simple ointment as will make the whole up to an ounce. The odor of this is not unpleasant, while it retains its greasiness for a considerable time after being applied. It should be smeared on in the morning, as well as at night, after the bath. As soon as the patient is well enough—we assume not until the twenty-first day of the fever is past—one or two washings in carbolic soap, in which process the hair should be included, is recommended. This, our authority says, will remove all traces of infection.

The bed and body linen should be put as soon as they are removed from the person, in tub filled with water in which a large tablespoonful of carbolic acid has been dissolved, after which they can be removed from the room and washed without danger of spreading the disease to others. This method, says the writer, has been thoroughly tested under the most crucial conditions, which all indicate "that it is possible to very materially limit the contagiousness of scarlet fever by simple means, and thus to more or less completely control the spread of the disease."

All Sorts.

The grand jury at New Orleans, La., suggested last week that a crematory be established under the direction of officers of the Charity Hospital, for the purpose of burning the bodies of persons who die of contagious diseases.

A demand for trade dollars has sprung up in London, where a use for them is found in the trade with China. Within a week $200,000 have been shipped from this country to London. One firm sent $80,000 in one consignment.

Cowboys recently attempted to take possession of the town of Hunnewell, an important cattle station in Kansas. Five City Marshals were successively appointed in ten days, and all resigned. At length the sheriff with a posse arrested ten of the rioters, and quiet was restored.

Wolf Meyer, "the oldest resident of Newark, N. J.," died at his residence, No. 218 Court street, in that city, last week, at the age of one hundred and six years. He was a soldier under the First Napoleon and was highly respected. He leaves three daughters living in Newark.

Friday was the last day of summer, according to the almanac. The mean temperature for the three summer months was a little warmer than that of the corresponding period last year. The extremes in 1882 were, however, much greater than those of the present year. The highest range of the mercury last year was in July, when it mounted to 93 degrees. The record this year shows that the thermometer marked but 90.5 degrees when at the highest.
