Tin in West Virginia.

MINES WHICH WILL HAVE A BEARING ON THE TINPLATE OUTPUT.

GRINTSVILLE, W. VA., March 18.

It is not generally known that they are in successful operation in West Virginia two tin mines, one at least, of which is destined to have a most important bearing upon the output of tinplate in this country. One of these mines is situated not far from Huntingdon, Cabel county, within a short distance of the Ohio river, while the other, and by far the largest, is located on the banks of Laurel river, in Calhoun county, about five miles from this place. This mine, which is unfortunately remote from railway transportation and in a region where as yet even wagon roads are few and those few bad, were discovered early last spring by prospectors of coal and is now owned by ex-State Senator T. J. Farnsworth, of Buckhannon, and Benjamin Ridgway, of Staunton, Va. A year ago the land lying along the line of the tin-bearing formation, notwithstanding it was covered by a dense growth of valuable hard wood, might have been purchased for fifty cents an acre. To day this same land is held at hundreds of thousands of dollars, and is rapidly increasing in value. The opening of the mine is at the foot of an enormous hill or mountain, and the mass of ore brought to light seems to be practically inexhaustible. The rock containing the ore, which is of a blueish gray color, is extremely hard, and cannot be loosened except by heavy blasts. Primitive machinery for manipulation of the ore is in operation, and many curious visitors, many of them capitalists and manufacturers, come from remote points to examine the mine and ore. The ore assays 42 percent of pure tin. As soon as necessary arrangements can be made, smelting works will be erected at these mines, and the work of developing the property pushed with vigor.

The Cabell county mine is owned by a syndicate of Eastern capitalists, but the ore is not so rich or the deposit so large as the Calhoun county bonanza. It is believed by many that other large deposits of tin exist among the mountains of the interior, and an extensive system of prospecting is talked of the coming summer.

American Interests to be Protected.

WASHINGTON, March 19.—Rear-Admiral Jouett, commanding the North Atlantic squadron, now at New Orleans to day telegraphed to Commander Clark of the Alliance, instructing him to proceed to Cartagena and Barranquilla, United States of Columbia, and protect American interests in that country during the present disturbed condition of affairs. The dispatch informs Commander Clark that vessels belonging to American citizens, which have been seized by the insurgents without any compensation, may be forcibly recovered, and says that the United Magdalena Steam Navigation Company, of New York, has called the attention of the Secretary of State to the seizure of their steamers by an armed force.

A Fatal Fall at A Rink.

About ten days ago a young lady named Miss Sophia J. Weaver fell at the Grand Central skating rink in this city and died yesterday morning from its effects. The direct cause of her death was cerebral meningitis, which was superinduced by the fall. She first felt unwell Friday of last week, and Dr. Seabrook was called on Saturday. The girl said she had fallen on the ice and suppressed the real truth because her mother, who lives in Millersburg, had requested her not to attend the skating rinks. There were severe contusions upon her person, and she suffered considerably until Tuesday of this week, when she became delirious and remained in a semi-conscious condition until her death yesterday. She was aroused at intervals only to lapse again into insensibility. The fact of her falling at the rink was not made known until an hour or more after the girl's death, when a lady who called happened to say something about it. Dr. Seabrook does not hesitate to say that Miss Weaver's death was undoubtedly due to the accident at the rink. The dead girl's remains were taken to her home at Millersburg for interment this morning. She had been living with a family named Smith, at 1836 1/2 Ridge avenue. The young girl had rather prepossessing features and was well liked by those who knew her. She was aged about 20 years.

Enticing Girls From Home.

HOW GIRLS ARE LURED TO THE "WHITE ELEPHANT" IN BALTIMORE AND EXPOSED TO RUIN.

I take the liberty of writing to you with reference to a very corrupting drinking house in Baltimore, called the White Elephant, which is by its advertisements in the newspapers of Philadelphia and New York enticing girls from their homes under false pretense and bringing them into very disreputable associations. I thought you might possibly, through your excellent paper, warn your citizens against such enticements. I have understood that the advertisements represent the place as a theatre or concert, and offer the girls very good wages, no experience on the stage being necessary. A great many girls have been brought here and have found themselves obliged to sit from 8 P. M. until 1 A. M. in a very large saloon, where they are obliged to drink with the depraved men who frequent the place, and be subject to their proposals. The girls are here with out money and have no way of getting home until they have passed two weeks or more in this degrading place and have earned enough by this intolerable slavery to pay their way home and discharge debts contracted here. I visited two houses last week where girls employed at the White Elephant board and found some pitiful cases of girls brought here under false pretences. We were able to rescue one very attractive and refined girl from Philadelphia, who had spent one night in the saloon and felt that she could not endure another, but had no means to get home. Human friends secured her a pass from the Mayor and sent her off on Thursday. Can you not do something to prevent your girls coming here? I hope some thing may suggest itself to your mind, and that your efforts may be successful.

An Elopement And A Fight

GEORGE TOMB THRASHES HIS RELATIVE FOR SCANDALOUS GOSSIP.

WILLIAMSPORT, March 21.—George Tomb, of Jersey Shore, whose sister Miss Jennie, eloped with Clarence Brown on Tuesday last, to-day attacked his relative George Martin, upon the streets of that village, and gave him a sound thrashing. Martin was twice knocked down, and when he rose the second time both eyes were black and his face was bleeding.
 Tomb's anger with his relative arose from the fact that the latter had spread a scandalous report concerning the elopement. The marriage was opposed by the Tombs but approved by the Browns, and the latter family knew of the intended elopement. The young people are spending their honeymoon in Philadelphia.
 Tomb to-day gave $300 bail for his appearance at may court, to answer for the assault on Martin. Both the families will push the thing to the bitter end and that fact, coupled with their high prominence and relationship, has made the affair the sensation of the day in this region.

Wallace for a Second Class Mission.

WASHINGTON, March 19.—It is capital gossip that ex Senator Wallace, of Pennsylvania, had been booked by President Cleveland for a second class foreign mission. Which particular one is not known. The story comes straight from the white house. It is understood that Mr. Wallace was tendered the place of first assistant secretary of state and declined it. Secretary Bayard is anxious that the place shall be raised to its proper dignity in comparison with similar positions in other departments. He wants a big man there. It was first offered to Senator Pendleton. The latter thought the hole was too small for him and declined it with out thanks. Pendleton aspires to the French mission.

How Can Busy Women Work For Temperance.

Over and over again, as we women who are trying to do a little for temperance ask the aid of other women, we are met with this reply, "Our hearts are with you, we realize as only woman can who keep their eyes open to what is passing around them, how much needs to be done. But we have no time. Our family income is small, our family large and the first duty that devolves upon us is plain, to care for our own homes and families, to make the hard earned income go as far as possible in providing for that family. There is no time left for outside duty, and neither health or strength will allow of any addition to our burden.

What can we say? We who know so well how hard it is to find time for the work we dare not quite put aside, who have taken the vow of the W. C. T. U., and are pledged to work in every possible way to suppress the sale and the use of intoxicating drinks?

We cannot tell them, these women who would evidently be so glad to help if they could, but who honestly believe it would be wronging their families if they did so, to let the home duties go, to alight the house work and sewing, that they may find time for temperance work. No, we can not, dare not advise that, for we know as well as they that neglect of family duty by the wife and mother would be the carrying away of the corner stone of the family temple, and so far from helping on the cause of temperance, would do more to injure it, and bring reproach upon it, than anything else she could do. We want no Mrs. Jellibys in our temperance army, who wholly neglect home duties and their own children, while they send away temperance tracts and address temperance meetings. The husband who found his shirts without buttons, and the toes of his stockings undarned, while his wife was away from home to attend a meeting like this, would not be likely to become an honorary member of our beloved order, to wear our white ribbon with honor and pride.

The home work must be done, whether the public work is or not. The floors must be swept, the beds made, the meals must be regular, the children must be washed and dressed, the parlors patched and the whole long list of homely duties faithfully attended to, before we have any right to spend our time at religious or temperance meetings.

What, then can we busy house-keepers, whose hearts are in this great work and whose hands fairly tingle with desire to help in it, what can we do? Remember, now, I am only speaking of those who are so tied. There are many whom Providence has raised above the burden of ordinary routine house work there are many, still in the prime of life, whose children are getting beyond the need of mother's constant care, and are even old enough to assist her in duties, both public and private. There are still others who can plan their work so that the two calls upon their time may both be attended to, and neither neglected. It is not of them I speak, but of those whose every hour is full to overflowing with home work which can not be neglected or set aside.

What can we do? Oh so much, though our name is on the roll of no temperance organization, and our face is rarely seen at their conventions. First and foremost we can live consistent temperance and temperate lives. We can so array ourselves on the side of this great cause, that neither husband, nor son, nor neighbor, need ever have cause to doubt where we stand. There is never a woman too busy for that, never a woman too busy to order all her household economy on strict temperance principles. More than all other influences combined, I believe to be, in this work, the quiet, unwavering, consistent work of a temperance woman, in kitchen and parlor, by the bedside of her children, in the every day round of her work. I have long had a firm belief, even though it sounds like treason to long established sentiment, that the downfall of so many of our sons when they go out from under the roof-tree to work their way in the world, is due not only to baneful influences encountered in the society they meet among strangers, but also, may God forgive the mothers! to the wrong ideas instilled through the long, impressive years of childhood and youth.

I believe more and more firmly the longer I live, that the cider barrel that is a part of the furnishing of so many of our New England cellars, is the direct cause of more drunkenness than the whisky barrel of the rum seller. It is a strong statement, I know, and it is only a belief founded on observation, for there is no way to obtain statistics upon such a subject.

But the love of cider, and the habit of drinking it freely has been so universal among our New England farmers and villagers, that the line where the grown up farmer boy begins to substitute, on a cold day when he goes to town, the half glass of vile whisky or the whole glass of cheap manufactured wine, for the glass of cider he would go down the cellar and draw if he were at home, is not very plainly drawn, and many and many who habitually drink whisky to day, if he would speak the whole truth, would say that the liking for its stimulus came from the stimulus, and good feeling, which came from the cider in his father's cellar. I think there are few mothers but have this matter virtually under their own control. There are few husbands and fathers who would not be amenable to the right sort of influence in this direction, and the cider could be, as it should be, converted into vinegar. Then there is the twin sister of the cider barrel, the jug of home made wines. I will not say, for that I am not prepared to defend, that there should be no more of our home made wine manufactured, but I will say, and know it to be beyond dispute, that we have no right nor business with them outside the sick room.
 —Mary G. Dole.

PITTSBURGH, March 20.—The miners employed by the New York and Cleve, land coal company made a demand yesterday for three cents per bushel for mining. The company refused to pay the advance and will shut down their works on Monday. Over 1,000 men are employed at these mines. The strike for three cents is now nearly general and fully 10,000 miners are idle. Coal for local consumption is very scarce and prices have been advanced one half cent per bushel.
