

WITH HOOK AND LINE,

THE GEORGIA PHILOSOPHER FOLLOWS GOOD OLD ISAAK WALTON.

He Thinks Fishing a Business Both Scriptural and Apostolic—Some Points for the Amateur Angler—Aggravating Mishap.

[Bill Arp in Atlantic Constitution.]
For a few days past I have been going fishing. The creek is close by, and the fish are spoiling for the frying pan, and fishing is such quiet, contemplative work or play, or whatever you may call it. It is the only occupation I know of that is common to white folks and niggers, to gentlemen and ragabonds. They are all equal on the banks of the creek, or around the mill pond, and the fish are no respecters of persons. I have not enjoyed my usual spring fishing, and so I thought I would make up for lost time. Day after day I have been throwing bait to the fly, but the weather has been so cold and the wind all wrong and I have had awful poor luck. But nevertheless I like fishing, even if they do nibble and nibble until they get all my bait.

I wonder what makes us humans love to catch things and kill things that are trying to dodge us. Nobody wants to shoot a chicken in the yard, but he will hunt all day to kill a few birds, or a squirrel, or catch a rabbit. We will wear out a dollar's worth of clothes while hunting for a dime's worth of game. We take no pleasure in pursuing anything that is tame and submissive, but only hanker after that which is wild and trying to escape. I reckon it is nature, just nature; the love of dominion. If the fish or the squirrels would come at our call and surrender, we would turn them loose and say, "O gentle creature, I will not harm you." The scriptures say, "I will give you dominion over the fish of the sea, and the fowls of the air and the beasts of the field," and when the fish and the fowls and the beasts say catch me if you can, we go at it. But after all it looks rather small in a grown-up man or a philosopher, or a preacher, to sit on a log half a day trying to outgeneral a little innocent perch, and drown them in the air, and all for sport—most all, we wouldn't give more than 25 cents for the average lot.

But I like fishing, nevertheless, and the business is both scriptural and apostolic. It is the opinion at my house, however, that I am a poor fisherman and that it does not pay, and that some other things are more important now. So I shall quit for a time, that is, until the water gets warm and the sweet south wind comes breathing upon the violet banks. I never did know what fish had to do with the question. They will not bite when the north wind blows. It will change their appetite in a night. Neither will they bite in the light of the moon like they will when the nights are dark. A dark moon and a south wind makes fish hungry and eager for bait.

Some men are fishermen by nature and instinct. Some wander up and down all day and change their base every ten minutes, and some will sit in the same spot all day long. I knew a famous fisherman in Rome a long time ago who would wager a dollar that he could catch a cat, or a trout, or a sucker, or a bream at will. He would let you name the kind and then he would catch that kind on the first trial. He knew their habits and holes and haunts, and what bait they loved, and knew how to fish for them. I can't do that. I have watched something nibbling at my hook for half a do on times and at last pulled up a little dirty mud turtle.

That is disgusting and aggravating, but when a long suffering fisherman accidentally and unexpectedly finds a big trout has actually grabbed his hook and shows fight and darts around and pitches and cavorts, and lashes the water, and bends your pole almost double and you brace yourself for the great occasion with hope in your eye and your heart in your mouth and begin to draw him in and up and out, and just at the inexpressible moment of success and triumph he gives a flirt and falls back. Oh, what a fall was that, my countrymen. What goodness, what helplessness, what crushing, subduing feelings come over a man. He couldn't smile if he was going to be hung if he didn't. It is worse than to have a cow die, or to be left by the train. I have experienced that, and gone home as humbled as a wet dog. It is a $10 grief over the loss of a half dollar fish. But such is life. Little things affect us more than big ones when we have our hopes and our expectations wrought up to concert pitch.

Hugo's Later Days.
[Exchange.]
An estimate of the man may be summed up in the words of one who saw him a year ago and wrote: "If Hugo were not a genius he would be a nonentity; if he had not toiled continually with his brain he would have become imbecile. As it is, with all his genius, scholarship, and untiring mental labor, he is, in private personality, little less than ridiculous, a mass of self-love, a monster of conceit. To know him as a poet, novelist, orator, dramatist, may be delightful; to know him as an individual, in his apartment in the Boulevard de Clichy, drinking in hyperbolic praises, and ever thirsty for more, is dreary and disappointing."

Remarkable Results of Freezing.
[Sci. & Jour.]
A remarkable effect of low temperature has been pointed out to the Glasgow Philosophical Society. At about 122 degrees below zero, Fahrenheit, the flesh of animals, such as mutton, becomes so exceedingly hard as to ring like porcelain when struck, and it may be readily crushed to a fine powder. More singular still, microbes living in the flesh before freezing have been seen alive after thawing, even after an exposure of 100 hours to the intense cold.

Louisiana Iron.
[Pica o Times.]
The discovery, in Calbarne parish, Louisiana, of a practically inexhaustible supply of iron ore containing 32 per cent of pure metallic iron is another of the many revelations made in the south since the spirit of general enterprise was developed. Louisiana now promises to rank high as an iron mining state, in addition to maintaining her old superiority as the land of sugar cane.

It Is "Chinquo."
The true name of China is said to be Chinquo, the Chinese "kingdom of the world." The term was by usage corrupted to Chin quo, and from this word the Portuguese gave it the name of China.

Flouring Mills for Australia.
Buffalo manufacturers are equipping with full machinery several flouring mills located in the interior of Australia.

Italy has 4,890,000 lemon trees, which bear 1,260,000,000 lemons annually.

Experience with Imported Cutlery.

[New Haven News.]
About four years ago, Col. Frary, president of the Bridgeport Cutlery company, while on a tour through Europe, visited many of the cutlery establishments in Germany, Hamburg, and England. The manufacture of razors being in a primitive state in this country, he decided that he could do no better than to bring over some of the workmen to the United States. The workmen in Sheffield, England, were, as a rule, members of the trades unions, and Col. Frary had considerable difficulty in engaging the men whom he wanted. A few months later he had the satisfaction of seeing forty of them with their families sailing for this country, accompanied by the secretary of the trade union. In Germany and Hamburg he engaged sixty men, and at once shipped them and their families to this country. Separate rooms were fitted up for the newly arrived workmen in the shops at Bridgeport, the Germans being in one part of the works and the English in another.

Col. Frary said: "I had a great deal of trouble with my men at first. I did not have nearly as much trouble with the Germans as with the English. The latter demanded a separate work room apart from all the workmen in the factory. If one of the men in my employ wanted to enter the room while they were at work they would throw down their tools and would not resume their labors until the visitor had closed the door behind him. I was the only man in the entire shop whom they would let into the room without stopping work. A peculiar feature about them was that they would not work after 12 o'clock noon on Saturdays. Whatever money was left after buying the week's supply the men would go on a spree with until the last cent was spent, which was usually about Tuesday morning. American workmen are the best in the world."

Male Birds as Dandies.
[Charles Whimble in Magazine of Art.]
The best time for seeing perfect feathering is in the winter, or onward to the spring; then, after a very short honeymoon, the birds settle down to domestic drudgery with exemplary ardor, with the result that at the end of a few weeks their tail-feathers are rough and irregular, their plumons worn and ragged from constant contact with the nest in sitting; and by the time their new suit comes at midsummer, they are more than ready for it. The spring, of course, is the climax of a bird's life. With scrupulous care he arranges hourly his feathers, all their peculiarities are seen to perfection, and many markings of decoration are then seen upon the wings and tail.

The fleshy combs and protuberances become scarlet and enlarged, and any one who has not seen a pheasant or cock grouse at this season of love would be astonished at the alteration from his normal state. The cock pigeon swells that part of his body most adorned with iridescent feathers to make the grandest show he can; and every humble finch and small bird brushes up his modest finery. It is said that not a single bright colored feather on any bird's body is left idle or undisplayed. If birds have bright colored tails they raise them to their highest and fullest and abase their heads, if bright heads, then they shake out their plumes, their eye distends, and their wattles swell, and if, as in some cases, they have large tippets of feathers falling on both sides of the head, they contrive to levelled them shall see the glories of both sides at one glance, and so drag all the feathers of the far side round to the near side, making such a huge mass that the face is nearly hidden and the projecting beak alone shows where the head must be. All this done for the hen's benefit, and it is only done when she is near; it all turns on her existence, and ceases if she be absent.

Russian Civilization.
[Professor C. K. Adams Lecture.]
Whatever the faults of England, and they are neither few nor small, it remains unquestionably true that Anglican prestige stands for the best that European civilization has to offer in all parts of the globe. The English flag has everywhere been the herald of representative institutions and the shield of religious and political freedom. Russia, on the other hand is essentially Asiatic in her theories and in her methods. Napoleon said, "if you scratch a Russian you come upon a Tartar." So it is with Russian civilization. Under a thin varnish of conventional politeness is to be found the most formidable enemy in existence of representative institutions and of social and religious freedom. Unless religious liberty is a fraud and political liberty a snare and a delusion, the further aggrandizement of Russia at the expense of England would be not simply the elevation of one power and the decline of another, but the triumph of absolutism over freedom and the pushing back of civilization itself.

Manners and Customs.
[English Magazine.]
As a sign of affection kissing was unknown to the Australians, the New Zealanders, the Papuans, the Esquimaux, and other races. The Polynesians and Malays always sit down when speaking to a superior. The inhabitants of Mallicolo, an island in the Pacific ocean, show their admiration by hissing; the Esquimaux pull a person's nose as a compliment; a Chinaman puts on his hat where we should take it off, and among the same curious people a coffin is considered as a neat and appropriate present for an aged person, especially if in bad health.

One Good Indian.
[Book Reviewer.]
Mrs. Custer, unlike most people who have dwelt on the frontier, did know one good Indian who was not dead. He was the only one she ever knew who worked. He had proved deficient in courage when undergoing the torture of the sun dance, and had had the bad taste to faint when hung up by the skin of his back, through which sticks of wood had been drawn. From that hour he was an object of scorn. He was condemned to wear squaw's clothing, and was sentenced to the degradation of making himself useful.

Did He Mean It?
It was at the breakfast table, Mr. Snelling was telling Mrs. S. about a farce he had attended the night before. "Ah," said he, "my dear, you'd have died laughing if you could have seen it!" Then he added, in a tone of burning enthusiasm, "How I wish you'd been there!"
Even now he can not quite understand why Mrs. S.'s remarks directly afterward took such an unusually and violently personal turn.

A Valid Excuse.
A gentleman who imagined that he recognized a lady friend, advanced cordially, and addressed her: "I beg pardon," he said, "but isn't this Miss Greenleaf?"
"No, sir," replied the lady, "my name is Redpath." Ah, excuse me, I must be color blind.

CANCER CURED.

No disease has so thoroughly baffled the skill of the medical profession as cancerous affections and as they have always been considered incurable, it has been thought disreputable to adopt their treatment as a speciality; and hence physicians have neglected their proper study. But of late years new and important discoveries have brought forth a course that now proves successful in any of its forms, with certainty, without the use of the knife or caustic plasters. We have a treatment that is comparatively mild. It is not poisonous, does not interfere with the healthy flesh, can be applied to any part of the body, even the tongue. We take nothing for our services until the cancer is cured. Address
