His standing before the people of his State made him the Democratic candidate for Governor in 1860 .--That was not a good year for Democratic candidates, and Henry S. Lane defeated him. Lane went to the United States Senate soon after and Governor. Two years later the Democrats turned the State Legislature and Senate inside out, and the new Houses at once elected Hendricks United States Senator for the term expiring in 1869.

This was the opportunity which Hendricks needed to give him a national reputation. Democrats could do little more than protest in those days, but Hendricks protested against Republican methods he effectual ly that he was the most conspicuous candidate before the Democratic National Convention, held in New York city in 1868. New York's delegates and all the Northwest backed him, but Ohio kicked over the traces, voted persistently for Seymour and finally, with the aid of the spectators' created a stampede.

After leaving the Senate in 1869 Mr. Hendricks practiced law in Indianapolis until 1872. He was then made the candidate for Governor of the State, and was elected by a majority of 1,148. At St. Louis, in 1876, be accepted the second place on the ticket headed by Mr. Tilden, and was elected, but deprived of his office by the desperate means resorted to by the Republican party. At the last Democratic National Convention held in July, 1884, he advocated the nomination of Senator McDonald, of Indiana, for the Presidency, but the choice fell upon Grover Cleveland. Senator William A. Wallace, of Pennsylvania, then proposed Mr. Hendricks for the party's good. The triumphant election of the ticket and the induction of Cleveland and Hendricks into their respective offices are events still fresh in the minds of the public. ### Thos, A Hendricks Record.

Thomas A. Hendricks was born in Ohio in 1819, his native place beng a small village in Muskingum county not far from Zanesville, ohio.In 1823. when he was three years old, his father moved to Shelby county, Indiana, and that State has been his home ever. His father had sufficient property to educate his children, and at the age of 23, young Hendricks was graduated at Hanover College. He immediately went to Chambersburg Pa, where he studied law, and two years later was admitted to the bar. He then returned to Indiana and hung out his shingle in the village of Shelbyvill. old acquaintances say he made a quick success, both by his knowledge of law. and by his attractive personal chracteristics. It is said that the late Goy. Morton, when opposing young Hen. dricks, usually won before a jury, but in an argument before a judge, Hendricks could beat him every time.

In 1844, Hendricks was elected a member of the State Legislature, and of your greateat sorrow and deepest two years later helped to form a constitution for his State. The next five years he served his district in Congress. Then one morning, while sitting on Mrs. Hendricks ; the portico of his home in Shelbyville a friend handed him an envelop postmarked "Washington." It was from Franklin Pierce, asking him to come Washington and take charge of the office of Land Commissioner. He accepted and for nearly four years discharged the duties of the post. He remained in office one year longer than he intended to, because of a controversy with Land Officer Burch, of Missouri. Burch's son had taken up a very large tract of the best land in Missouri, and Burch wanted to get a patent for the young man contrary to apolis, Ind .:

posed to be in poor health.

One of his latest public utterances was a speech in which he approved of Parnell's methods in Irish politics, and prophesied the complete sepera tion of Ireland from Great Britain at no distant day. Mr. Hen lricks belonged to the Jacksonian school of Democrats, and took no stock in the new doctrine taught by Mugwum s.

He was arranging his affai s at home with the intention of going to Washington to preside over the Senate, which meets the first Monday in December.
