Farmer Michael Reilly Killed For His Money.
 HONESDALE, Pa., January 1.—Michael Reilly, brother of ex-Representative Reilly, of Honesdale, was most brutally murdered on Friday at his home in Preston township. His body was found early in the morning near the barn, a short distance from his dwelling. The murdered man lay on the ground in a pool of blood. His head was split open and the brains oozed out.
 A search of the premises brought to light a blood-stained ax, the instrument of the murderer. He had thrown it far into a neighboring field. Mr. Reilly, was a substantial farmer, living comfortably upon his land with his wife and mother. The women of the family were absent yesterday and the night before. The house was found ransacked from top to bottom, and a desk, which had contained $400 in cash, was broken open and rifled.
 The theory is that the murderer, knowing that Mr. Reilly was alone in the house, loitered about in the early morning until the farmer should go out to feed his stock, and thus leave the house empty. Entering the house, he robbed hastily examined it for plunder, and then, it is supposed, started away, but was met or seen by Reilly, when the murder followed.

EVARTS threatens the Senate with one of his long winded speeches. We sympathize with the Democratic side of the chamber, but as for the other fellows we say give it to them.
TEHR was something 'leaky' about the rains of Monday night.

Remarkable Dogs.

Get Holland's translation of the worthy Pliny if you want an afternoon's amusement. He will tell you that, if you cut off the tip of a dog's tail within forty days from its birth, it will never go mad, and that the best of the litter is the whelp which gets his eyesight last, or that which the mother carries first into her kennel. Of the dog's faithfulness he has notable instances. It has been known to throw itself into the flames when its master's funeral pyre was kindled. It will breed with the tiger. The Indians cross their dogs in that way. The first and second crosses are too savage; the third can be trained. No matter how fierce a dog is, it will never attack you if you sit down—Homer says the same thing in the "Odyssey,"—and it may be silenced by holding it to a brand snatched from a funeral pyre. When cremation was given up, this recipe had to be modified; and for the brand was substituted "the hand of glory," which credulous medieval burglars used to carry with a view to keeping the watchdog quiet. The most fighting breed was the Molossian, a splendid sample of which the king of Albania gave to Alexander the Great when he was going to India. Alexander had boars, stags, and bears slipped to it, but the dog lay motionless; whereas the king's anger was roused that such a noble form should cower so sluggish a spirit, and he bade the dog be killed, sending a message to the giver that the gift had proven unworthy to them both. Whereupon another like dog was sent, with the warning that the first dog's inaction in presence of small game was not due to sluggishness, but to contempt, such dogs being used to be matched against elephants and lions. Alexander at once tried him with a lion, which he slew, and then set him at an elephant, round which he circled, baying loudly, and with all his bristles erect, attacking first on one side and then on the other, slipping in and avoiding the elephant's stroke whenever he got the chance. At last the elephant grew dizzy, and falling down, was made a prey by its small-sized antagonist.—All the Year Round.

 In the red hills of Calaveras, Walter Mercer, a young Californian, recently found a cave of wonders. In one chamber are the angel's wings—two magnificent formations, white like the wings of a seraph, and so delicate that to the eye they seem as if a slight tap would bring them down in fragments.
 The Union Pharmaceutique says that an eminent chemist prepared with great care a mixture of manganese, permanganate of potash, and oxalic acid, only to find that the mixture exploded a few minutes afterward in the patient's pocket. It also gives an instance of a tooth powder composed of cacahu and chlorate of potash exploding in the mouth of a person engaged in brushing his teeth.

A Singular Occurrence.

A telegram from Greenville, S. C., says: In 1875 James A. Watson, whose family then lived in Yorkville, lost a child by death. At that time Watson was in Baltimore teaching in a commercial college, and he could not conveniently leave his business to attend the funeral. Temporary burial was given the body. Yesterday Mr. Watson went into the cemetery to remove the body. The coffin was raised from the grave, and, desiring to look upon the face of the child, the father had the lid removed. As the undertaker was lifting it from the coffin a loud explosion occurred, shattering the glass panel into numberless fragments. Several pieces struck Mr. Watson in the face, cutting him severely. One piece struck the bride of his nose, cutting entirely through it. The explosion was equal to that of a dynamite cartridge and was noticed by persons more than a quarter of a mile distant. The face of the child was in an excellent state of preservation, as were also its burial clothes and a wreath of flowers on its breast seemed to be nearly as fresh as when buried twelve and a half year ago.
