Pretty soon as know !" the car drew out and began to rumble on down toward the blue grass region it in a coffin." we heard a baby begin to cry.

"Ah! Twins?"

This ejaculation came from an old lady in glasses to my left. And she began to rock herself as if rocking some little cradle that long, long ago has rounded into a coffin.

Our necks have been broken looking up to the that contained my postal. cars coming down out of the clouds, the cascades, the wonderful crags and peaks, and now we wanted to see a bit. of level, lowly humanity. We had it here and proposed to enjoy it for a change. A big fat gentleman with a fan, although it was snowing hard, arose and waddled down the aisle and back to get a good look at the twins. The old lady stopped rocking her cradle of long ago, and, leaning over to a neighbor, said something about men being good nurses if they "only were a mind to."

Pretty soon there was another cry. Then the little German woman got up and walked the aisle two or three times with her baby, while the man, a timid, modest, little German, took the inside seat and nursed his charge closely with his head held down over it. We all began to be afraid that this one would cry also. So the good old lady in glasses rose up and went to the man and offered to take it. The big fat man looked up approvingly, and actually fanned himself in his ex citement and delight at this unselfish act of the old lady in glasses as she stood there before the mute and meek little German father with outreached arms for the infant.

"Twenty-five cents and the laggage car! Do you hear ?" cried the con. ductor, even more discourteously than before.

And with this the conductor actually reached his long arm across and caught at the precious burden in the meek and patient Germau's lap.

The old man was about to spring forward. The old lady was about to faint; when suddenly the conductor gave a jerk, when out jumped a jolly good natured dog; a big one too, and he went up the isle, wagging his tail and opening his red mouth good naturedly as if he would like to laugh at the whole of us.
