

To Do Like PA DOES.—The other evening there were several visitors at Colonel Grandson's house. The colonel takes great delight in showing off his little son.

He is a fine little fellow, said Mrs. Graftney, one of the visitors. Come here my little man.

The boy approached her and permitted her to lift him on to her lap. Why you are heavy. How old are you.

Six years, goin' on seven. Yes, and you'll soon be a man. What are you going to do when you become a man.

Do like pa does. How does he do?

Oh sometimes when he comes home at night he falls over a chair, and when maw gets mad he says it's a pretty way for a woman to go on just because a man takes two beers and—

But the colonel had seized the youth.

FOND WIFE—Are my husband's ashes ready.

Dr. Fake (hesitating)—Well, yes—ah—hem—I believe so.

Fond Wife (surprised)—Why! Don't you know.

Dr. Fake—Well, the fact is, we've had such a rush of business lately that I got the ashes mixed. However, there are several urns, so take your choice.

Be sure and carry in that wood this afternoon, young man.

What'll you gimme.

I'll give you to supper time to do it.

If that's all there is in it I'll strike. If you do, I follow suit, and don't you think that the old man's good right arm has lost its cunning in the use of the lame-strap either.

You say McKenzie has a pet theory.

Yes.

I never knew it. What is it.

He thinks the girl he is engaged to is going to be satisfied to live on eight hundred a year.

What a wildly delusive dreamer McKenzie is.

After numerous unsatisfactory attempts the American whitefish has been successfully acclimated in English ponds.

A citizen of Akron, O., won't believe newspaper reports, and has started East to see if Gen. Grant is really dead.

Why, Pat, these are hatchets.

I know it, sir.

But I told you distinctly to get a box of matches.

I know it, sir; but the man didn't have no matches, an' I didn't know but what, seeing they were spelled so near alike, they'd do just as well.

EASTER is said to be the proper time for marrying. This gives the couple a long honeymoon, and they will be in just the right condition to repent when the next Lent comes round.
