

HIS GIRL HAD MONEY ENOUGH TO SEE HIM THROUGH.

I saw an amusing incident the other evening, said the Treasurer of a Chicago theatre to a Herald reporter and one that revealed a woman's true character. Just before the curtain rose a carriage drove up in front of the office and a young gentleman, alighted, followed by one of the prettiest young ladies I have ever seen. There was considerable of a crowd just then in front of my window, and it was two or three minutes before he reached me. Finally he appeared and asked me for two seats in the orchestra circle. I had none left that suited him, but offered him a box. He concluded to take it, and put his hand in his pocket for the money. The lady stood just behind him, but outside the little brass rail. He evidently had searched for his money in the wrong pocket, for his hand came out empty, only to dive into another. His face gradually flushed as the search proceeded, until it grew flaming red. I should have been perfectly willing to let him have the box, as I knew who he was and guessed that in changing his dress he had forgotten his money; but I wanted to see what he would do.

The little woman waiting for him became impatient at the delay. The nervous tapping of her fan on the rail was not exactly in unison with the strains of the orchestra that could be heard from the interior. At last, realizing that he had forgotten his pocket-book, the young man addressed me by name and said: "I—er—have left my pocket-book in my other trousers, but I will give you my card, and if you will oblige me with the tickets I will send you the amount in the morning." Here he made a dive into his pocket for his card-case, but failed to bring it to light. He had forgotten his card case as well as purse.

I was about to hand him a blank card when I caught sight of the lady's face. Her right hand held a handkerchief to her lips, while her eyes brimming over with laughter, sparkled merrily. She evidently enjoyed his discomfort to the utmost, and I was mentally reproaching her for lack of sympathy, when I spied just under the elbow of the now thoroughly embarrassed man a small hand pressed against his arm to attract his attention, while in its grasp was a dainty purse of shell and gold.

The young man saw it just as I did and with a sigh of relief took the proffered pocket-book, but not without a gentle pressure on the hand that so thoughtfully and delicately had tendered its offering. I doubted if the purse held enough to pay for the box as he opened it my doubts fled. I could plainly see two or three $10 bills, neatly folded, in one corner, while in the other were a flower and two or three pieces of cloth, evidently some of the samples to be found in every woman's purse or pocket.

The tickets being paid for, the couple entered, and through the little door in the back of my office I saw them stop in the vestibule and engage in courteous discussion. He seemed to wish her to take back her purse, which she finally did, and opening it, gravely took out the little wad of bills and put it in his hand. He at first refused to receive it, but she persisted and he accepted the loan. His hand closed over hers, and if ever a man's face could show absolute devotion his did then. I honestly believe he would have proposed to her on the spot had she not with a woman's intuition, foreseen the probability, quietly taken his arm, and moved toward the entrance of the box. I saw them later during the play and I am sure he watched her face much more closely than he did the stage. After the curtain fell I stood on the sidewalk and heard him tell the driver to go to a fashionable restaurant. I am willing to bet a bottle of wine that their engagement is announced before a month is passed.
