THE FINEST LINE OF CUTLERY.

Kit Carson Great Shot.

In 1863, writes Capt. Curtler, "I was a Deputy United States Marshal. I was one day riding along the Arkansas river when I saw a monster Rocky Mountain eagle darting down almost with the rapidity of lightning. Near the cabin was a corral in which was a large number of sheep, and thither the great eagle was bent for prey. Reining up my horse I awaited the result. There was a wild bleating and a rapid flight of the sheep, but a moment after the eagle rose from the corral bearing a large lamb with it. The lamb did not seem to impede its flight in the least, and the great strength of the eagle can readily be discerned by its breaking some branches near the top of the trees by the fearful stroke of its wings. Upward and upward it soared, the course of its flight being not far from the perpendicular.

At this moment a woman came out of the cabin, and, seeing the eagle with the lamb in his talons, uttered a shriek and hastened to the house. A moment later a man came out of the cabin with a long rifle in hand. He was dressed in a slouch hat, pantaloons and a white shirt. Just think of it—a white shirt in Colorado as early as 1863. By this time the eagle was soaring high; with its course over the river. To me it was becoming more like a dark speck in the sky, when the man raised his rifle to shoot. But hardly had I seen it before there was a flash from his rifle. Only a second had the man looked toward the eagle, and the stock of the rifle had hardly reached his shoulder before he fired.

For a moment it was difficult to tell the result of the shot, for the eagle was so far away. The speck grew larger. The eagle had been hit. It was falling. It came down slowly, for it fluttered desperately, swooping its great wings, trying to retain its place in mid-air. It then circled round and round, and, losing control of its wings, eagle and lamb fell in some thick brush on the opposite side of the river. I rode up to the cabin to learn the name of the man who made such a wonderful shot. It was Kit Carson."

Killed a Bear and Her Cub.

Grant White, of Beaver Mills, brought to H. & S. Schmid's meat market this morning a black bear, weighing 125 pounds, and her cub, weighing 50 pounds which he shot yesterday along Six Mile Run, about one mile above McCord's dam, while out hunting deer. The bear was short its right paw, which gives Mr. White a strong impression that it is the very same animal that escaped from a trap of his two years ago. Before he succeeded in shooting the bear, two or three very severe tussels had taken place between bruin and his dogs. While one of these fights was taking place the little fellow had made for the top of a tree but one dose of cold lead brought him down. Mr. White says that when he shot the old mother bear she was approaching him on her hind feet. This makes sixteen bears he has killed within the past ten years.—Phillipsburg Journal.

Of Interest to Voters.

Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph, Oct. 4, Judge Stowe, to-day, made a ruling that is of interest to all voters. The court decided the case of the registration and assessment of John M. Egerton in the Third district of the Thirtieth ward, Pittsburg, who asked to have the registering assessor put his name on the list so that he could pay his taxes and vote claiming that it is the assessor's business to see that all citizens are registered. The application was made by Wm. H. Barker. The court said: "It is not the business of the assessor to see that all voters in his district are registered, but that duty devolves upon each voter, and if he is not registered and is not entitled to a vote, it is his own fault. The court has no jurisdiction over an assessor unless he refuses to register a voter. He cannot be brought in on legal process for simply leaving a man's name off the list, or any apparently unintentional mistake. My own case is an example. I have changed my place of residence within the past few weeks, and in my new location I doubt if I am registered, and if I am not it is my own fault, because I should have seen to it, and as I have not, I suppose I have lost my right to vote. The application to require the registration of this man is refused."

A Stinging Story.

Many readers are familiar with Wall's extraordinary feat, in 1849, in driving, according to his statement, a swarm of bees across the plains. A day or two since, as one of our business men was coming down town, he happened to discover a huge bee quietly resting on Wall's shoulder, as preparations were being made to sprinkle the Court House lawn. "Say, Wall, what are you doing with that bee on your shoulder?"

Wall was startled for a moment, but recovering his usual composure, spoke with gravity, carrying conviction of unimpeachable truth. "I'll tell you, and it's the solemn truth, if ever I spoke it in my life. That bee is the queen of the swarm that I drove across the plains. She has been hunting me for years, and knew me the moment I called her name. You see, she is getting a little gray, but I knew her on sight. She plotted the swarm, and I used to feed her from my own molasses can. That bee is the last of her race, and I shall take care of her in her old age. I tell you John, that bee brings up many reminiscences of that memorable trip. Several times that swam stood by me in an hour of peril. They could scent an Indian several miles away, and they got to really enjoy an Indian attack. The fact is, they understood tactics as well as the best trained soldiers. When the queen sounded an alarm every bee was under arms ready for fight. First a skirmish line was thrown out, and you could see more or less uneasiness among the redskins as one and another would claw at his ears, eyes or nose, but when the order to 'charge' was sounded, and the 'bee battalions' began to move in 'double quick,' a route and stampede always followed. It is a fact, John, if ever I told the truth in my life. What I am saying is true. Those bees fought all my battles across the plains, and this is my 'old queen' sure enough.

Mr. Powderly on the Labor Question.

PHILADELPHIA, October 4.—In the Journal of United Labor to be issued to-morrow, Mr. Powderly, in speaking on the immigration question, will say:

On November 22, 1882, I visited the slave pens at Eckart Mines, Md., and saw 105 Hungarians, who had been brought to this country under contract to take the places of striking American miners huddled together in a single room. "Take 105 Irishmen, Englishmen, Scotchmen, Welshmen, Germans or Frenchmen, anywhere in this country, and you find a village or town of from 300 to 600 inhabitants supporting schools, churches, stores and other institutions. They would not submit to incarceration in the building at Eckart mines or in 'Kelly's row.' Their labor would go to improve the country in more ways than one. They would have their own families, having families to provide for, they would not be content to live as pigs and receive but 75 cents or $1 a day. "What harm are the 105 Hungarians doing by their mode of living? They are killing American labor, they are stopping the wheels of progress. Every 'Kelly's Row' that we have in this nation stops the building of a town of from 300 to 600 inhabitants. Every 'Kelly's Row' turns ninety-eight men out of 100 into beasts, into serfs. We want no more workmen in this country at present, and we should warn the foreign workmen to keep away."

One Armed Compositor.

Henry Penrod lost an arm in a railroad accident at Carbondale, Illinois, four years ago. He is now astonishing the people of Chicago by his cleverness in setting type with one hand. This is about as difficult as running a race with one leg. Penrod devoted many months to what seemed to others to be an impossible task of becoming a useful type setter with one arm gone. No one who knows nothing of a composing room can remotely realize the difficulties he was obliged to overcome. Mr. Penrod can now set 400 ems in 20 minutes, a rather hard thing for a man with two hands to do.
