

CYRUS FIELD DEAD.

Distinguished Brothers Present When the End Came.

FATHER OF THE ATLANTIC CABLE.

Life Sketch of a Career Remarkable in the History of National Progress. His Tenacity and Perseverance in Pushing the Great Enterprise Which Linked Two Continents.

Dobbs Ferry, N. Y., July 13.—Cyrus W. Field died yesterday in his home at Ardsley Park. His three brothers, David Dudley, Henry M. and Justice Stephen J. were at the bedside, the two first mentioned each holding a hand of the dying man as he passed away. Besides these there were present his physician, Dr. Contant, of Tarrytown; Mrs. Isabella Judson, Mr. Field's widowed daughter; her two sons, Cyrus Field Judson and Frank Judson, and the two nurses.

Mr. Field's condition grew so bad on Monday that it was evident that even his remarkable vitality could not stand the intense strain much longer. He was much worse than he had been at any time since his first attack, his pulse at times being 118 and his temperature 103. Drs. Contant and Field were in constant attendance upon him, though there was little their skill could do to relieve him. His delirium was more violent than ever before, and it was plain to the physicians that even if he should recover his physical health, which seemed probable, his brain would be permanently affected. His mind had been gradually failing for several weeks, and as long ago as May Dr. Contant suggested to the family that if Mr. Field had any business affairs to arrange they should be settled as soon as possible, hinting at the growing weakness of intellect.

Toward evening Mr. Field's fever partly subsided and there was a growing hope that he might begin to show signs of permanent improvement, but the gain was only temporary, and his vital powers had been so sapped by the long fight that he was unable to rally from the next relapse, which ended in death.

Arrangements have been almost completed for the funeral of Mr. Field, which will take place at Stockbridge on Friday, at 3 p. m. There will be a simple service, and those present will include only the members of the Field family and the most intimate relatives and friends.

A Remarkable Career.

The father of Cyrus W. Field, Rev. Mr. Field, had nine children. They were David Dudley, the eminent lawyer; Amelia, who married Rev. Josiah Brewster and died shortly after Timothy, who became an officer in the United States navy and was lost at sea in 1836; Matthew, a noted engineer, who died in 1878; Jonathan, also dead, who was once president of the Massachusetts senate; Stephen Johnson, now associate justice of the United States supreme court; Henry Martin, the editor and preacher; Mary, who died unmarried; and Cyrus West. David Dudley, Stephen, Cyrus and Henry have all had remarkable careers.

Cyrus West, the most remarkable of this truly remarkable family, was born in Stockbridge, Mass., Nov. 23, 1813. He was educated in his native town, after which, at the age of 15, he came to this city, where he obtained employment as a clerk for A. T. Stewart at $2 per week. He became a dealer in paper and failed two or three times.

His native energy and executive talents soon put him in possession of an ample fortune, so that in 1836 he practically retired from business and made an extended tour over South America.

On his return in the following year he was selected to engage in the establishment of a telegraph line in Newfoundland. After mature consideration he entered upon the great work. He procured a charter granting an exclusive right for fifty years to establish a telegraph line from the continent to the colony and thence to Europe.

After consulting Lieutenant Maury, of the navy, and Professor Morse as to its practicability, Mr. Field formed a company with $1,000,000 capital. Peter Cooper was the first subscriber to this fund. Mr. Field visited England in 1844 and 1845 for the further prosecution of his pet scheme.

He accompanied the expeditions of 1847 and 1848, fitted out to lay a cable across the Atlantic between Ireland and Newfoundland. The announcement that the cable had been laid sent a lightning thrill through all the land and men wept for joy. But the success was only temporary. Four hundred telegrams were transmitted and the cable's vitality ceased.

On his temporary success an ovation was given Mr. Field on his return to New York. Nothing daunted by the dark cloud he went to Europe again. Capital was procured only after a hard struggle with capitalists, but he knew how to gain and practicable his idea was, and persevered.

In the latter part of the sixties the Great Eastern, after repeated failures, completed the task of laying the great cable on July 27, 1866.

Cyrus W. Field was now the lion of the day. He received from congress a gold medal and the thanks of the nation. But Mr. Field did not rest on his laurels. The plan of the cable, he became the promoter of rapid transit. He secured a controlling interest in the old New York "L" road company, which worked wonders in spreading the great system.

In 1867 Jay Gould forced him out of the management, and since then he has not been heard of in any kind of enterprise.

A Branch Club.

CHICAGO, July 13.—Contrary to the strict injunction of ex-President Cleveland that Mrs. Cleveland's name must not be used for organization purposes in the next campaign, the Monarchists, his ladies have organized a Branch Cleveland club, of Warren county. They not only have organized the club to promote Democratic interests, but their moral support, but their donations seem to be to raise a campaign fund. The club has already sent $100 to the state committee.

To Mix a Mustard Plaster.

Just when they most need it many persons forget how to mix a mustard plaster—that is, what are the proportions of mustard and flour. For an adult the formula is one part mustard and two parts flour; for children, three parts flour and one of mustard. Water enough should be added to make a stiff paste which should be spread between soft muslin cloths.
