TEXT: "In respect of a holy day."-Col-

What the Bible here and elsewhere calls a what the Bible here and elsewhere calls a holy day we, by change of one letter and change of pronunciation, call holiday. But by change of spelling and accentuation we cannot change the fact that holidays have great significance. As long as the world stan's Christmas day and New Year's day and Easter day will be charged and surphers of which we have the standard with solarmy properties. charged with solemn suggestiveness and holy mirth. Whether you take the old style of my text and call them holy days, or the modern style and call them holidays, they somehow set all my nerves a-tingle and my deeper emotions into profoundest agitation. I am glad that this season we have the holi-days completely bounded. For years, Christmas day starting in the midst of one week, and New Year's day starting in the midst of another week, we have been perplexed to know when the holidays began and when they ended, and perhaps we may have begun them too soon or continued them too long.

But this year they are bounded by two beaches of gold—Sabbath, December 25, 1892, and Sabbath, January 1, 1893. The one Sabbath this year commemorates the birth of the greatest being that ever walked the earth; the other celebrates the birth of that which is to be one of the greatest years of all time; the one day supernatural because of an unhinged star and angelic doxelogy, and the other day natural, but part of a procession that started with the world's existence and will go on until the world is burned up; both the first and last days of these holidays coming in with Sabbatical splendor and solemnity, and girdling all the days between with thoughts that have all time and all eternity in their emphasis. How shall we spend them? At haphazard and without exacts likewing and with the exact l and without special direction, and they leaving, as they go away from us, physical fatigue and mental exhaustion, the effect of late hours and recklessness of diet adding another chapter to the moral and spritual and eternal disasters which have resulted from misspent holidays? Oh, no? A stout and resounding no! for all the eight days.

I propose that we divide this holiday sea-son, the two Sabbaths of the holiday and the six cays between, into three chapters— the first part a chapter of illustrious birthday; the second part a chapter of annual de-cadence; the third part a chapter of chronological introduction First, then, a chapter of illustrious birthday. Not a day of any year but has been marked by the nativity of some good or great soul. Among discoverers the birthday of Humboldt was Sept. 14 and of David Livingston March 19. Among astronomers the birthday of Islac Newton was Dec. 25 and of Herschel Nov. 17. Among orators the birthday of Cicero was Jan. 3 and of Chrysostom Jan. 14. Among prison reformers the birth tay of John Howard was Sep. 2 and of Elizabeth Fry May 1. Among painters the birthday of Raphael was March 85 and of Michael Angelo Murch 6. Among statesmen the birthday of Washington was Feb. 22, of Hamilton May 8 and of Jefferson April 2. Among consecrated souls the birthday of Mrs. Hemans was Sep. 25, of Lucretia Mott Jan. 3 and of Isabella Graham July 22. But what are all those birthdays compared with Dec. 25, for on or about that may was born one who eclipsed all the great names of all the cenuries -- Jesus of Bethle-hem, Jesus of Nazareth, Jesus of Golgotha, Jesus of Olivet, Jesus of the heavenly throne?

The greatest pictures have been made about scenes in His lifetime. The greatest sacrifices on field of battle or in hospital or on long march or in martyrdom have been inspired by His self abnegation. The finest words of eloquence ever spoken have been uttered in the proclamation of His Gospel. The grandest oratorios that have ev The grandest oratorios that have ever rolled from orchestras were descriptive of His life and death. There have been other orators, but none like Him who "spake as never man spake." There have been other reformers, but none like Him who will not have completed His mission until the last price. prison is ventilated, and the last blind eye opened, and the last deaf ear unstopped, and the last lame foot bounds like a roe, and the last case of dementia shall come to its right mind. There have been other discoverers, but none like Him able to find how man may be just with God. There have been other deliverers, but none like Him, the rescuer of Nations. There have been other painters, but none like Him who put the image of God on a lost soul. No wonder we celebrate His birth, Protestant church, Catholic church, Greek church, St. Isaac's of St. Petersburg. St. Peter's at Rome, the Madeielne at Paris, St. Paul's in London joining all our American cathedrals and churches and log cabin meeting houses and homes in keeping this pre-eminent birth

Elaborate and prolonged efforts have been made to show that the star that pointed to the manger in which Christ was born was not what it appeared to be, but a conjunc-tion of Jupiter and Saturn. Our wise men of the west say that the wise men of the east were mistaken. Astronomers, you know, can calculate backward as well as forward, can calculate backward as well as forward, and as they can tell what will occur a hun-dred years from now among the heavenly bodies, so they can accurately calculate backward and tell what occurred eighteen or nineteen hundred years ago. And it is true that seven years before Christ, in Chaldes, about three hours before day dawn, there was a conjunction of Jupiter and Saturn. Standing in Jerusalem and looking over toward Bethlebem, those two stars would have seemed to hang over that village, and it is suggested by a learned professor that the magi may have had weak eyes, so that the two stars may have looked like one. In order to take everything supernatural out of the story we have to blind the eyes of the magi and introduce a second star to help out the idea of the one star. But I prefer the simple story of the Bible, that a light of some kind story of the Bible, that a light of some kind — stellar or meteoric—pointed from the sky to the straw cradle. When it is so easy for God to make a world that He puts eighteen millions of them within one sweep of the telescope, He could certainly afford one silvery or flery signal of some kind to point the world to the place where the sovereign of the universe lay incarnated and infan-

If God could afford to make an especial earthquake at the crucifixion, the asiant rocks on Mount Calvary still showing that there was a convulsion of nature at that particular spot which was felt in none of the surroundings, then He could afford something unusual, something brilliant, something positive, something transndous at the nativity. If a king at the birth of a sou can have the palace illumined and couriers sent with swift dispatch to aunounce the gladness at the gates and wake up an employ. gladness at the gates and wake up an empire with canonade, I am not surprised that at the birth of the Son of GM there was or take his food from the beak of a filthy raven, and Socrates condemned to death, so that the Calvarian massacre was in the same old line of maltreatment. But the novelty old line of maltreatment. But the novelty of all the ages was the conjunction of divinity and humanity. Invisible deity, muscled and nerved and fleshed in masculine physique. A child and yet a God! Why, if the meteor had not pointed down that night, some angel would have rushed down and pointed with his glittering scepter. Isaiah and David and Ezskiel, who forstold the coming, would have descended from the coming, would have descended from their thrones and stood on the roof of the barn or in some way designated the honored locality. As the finger of light that Dazember 25 pointed to the straw cradle, now all the fingers of Christendom this moment, fingers of childhood and old age, fingers of sermon and song and decoration and fes-tivity, point to the straw cradle. Am I not right in saying that the first of the three chapters of the holidays should be devoted to the illustrious birth tay? By song and prayer and solemn reflection and charities o-day, and by gifts and trees that bear fruit in an hour after they are planted, and family gathering and hilarities sounding from cellar to garret to-morrow, keep Christmas.

As far as possible gather the children and the grandchildren, but put no estoppel on racket, whether of laughter or swift feet or toys in shape of rail trains or trumpets or infant effigy. Let the old folks for one day at least say nothing about rheumatism, or prospect of early demise, or the degeneracy of modern times, or the poison in confectionery. If you cannot stand the noise, re-tire from it for a little while into some other room and stop your ears. Christmas for children without plenty of noise is no Christchildren without plenty of noise is no Christmas at all. If children and grandchildren cannot have full swing during the holidays, when will they have it? They will be still soon enough, and their feet will slacken their pace, and ithe burdens of life will bear them down. Houses get awfully still when the children are gone. While they stay let them fill the room with such recogniting mirth that you can hear such resounding mirth that you can hear the echoes twenty years after they are dead. By religious celebration to-day and by do-mestic celebration to-morrow keep Christmas. As for our beloved church, we to-morrow night mean to set the children of our Sabbath-school wild with delight, and in The Christian Herald, with which I am connected, we are celebrating the holidays by sending out from two to four thousand Bibles a day, and they will continue to go out by express, by messengers and by mails until we have distributed at least one hun-dred thousand copies of the good old Book on which Christmas is built, and which gives the only healthful interpretation of these swift flying years.

The second chapter of the holidays must speak of annual decadence. This is the last Sabbath of the year. The steps of the last When it waved the springtime blossoms the year was young, and when it swung the scythe and cradle through the summer harvest fields the year was strong, but it is get-ting out of breath now, and after six more throbs of the pulse will be dead. We cannot stop this annual decadence. Set all the cks back, set all the watches back, set all the chronometers back, but you cannot set time back. For the old family clock you might suppose that time would have especial respect, and that if you took hold of those old hands on the face of that centenarian of a timepisce and pushed them back you might expect that time would stop or retreat for at least a few minutes. "No, no?" says the old family clock. "I must go on. I saw your father and mother on their wedding day. I struck the hour of your nativity. I counted the festal hours of the day in which you brought festal hours of the day in which you brought home a bride. I sounded the kneil at your father's death. I tolled at your mother's departure. Yea, I must sound your own going out of life. I must go on. I must go on. Tiek, toek! Tiek, toek!"

But there is a great city clock high up in the tower. There are so many wrongs in the tower. There are so many wrongs in all our cities to be righted, so many evils to be extirpated, so many prisons to be sanitaried—stop the city clock until all these things are done. Let common council and the people of the great town decree that the city half clock shall stop. We do not want city half clock shall stop. We do not want city half clock shall stop. We do not want council and council and council and the people of the great town decree that the city half clock shall stop. We do not want council and co We do not want the young year to inherit the misfortunes of the old year. By ladders lifted to the tower and by strong hands take hold and halt the city clock. "No! no!" says the city clock. "I cannot wait until you correct all evils or soothe all sorrow or drive out all sin. I have been counting the steps of your progress as a city. I have seen your opportunities. I have deplored seen your opportunities. I have deplored you neglects, but time wasted is wasted forever. I must go on, I must go on, Tic., tock! Tick, tock!' But in the tower of the capitols at Washington and London and Berlin and Vienna and all the great national capitals there are clocks.

Suppose that by presidential proclams-tion and resolution of the senate and house of representatives our national clock in the apitol turret be ordered to stop, "Stop, clock, until sectional animosities are "Stop, cooled off, until our Sabbaths are better kept, and drunkenness turns to sobriety, kept, and drunkenness turns to sobriety, and pribery, fraud and dissipation quit the land! Stop, O clock, in the tower of the United States Capitoi? "No, no?" says the clock, "I have been going on so long I can not afford to stop. I sounded the birthday of American Independence. I rang out the return of peace in 1855. I have seen many presidents inaugurated. I struck the pour of Lincoln's assassination. I have presidents inaugurated. I struck the nour of Lincoln's assassination. I have beat time for emancipation proclamation, and Chicago fire, and Charleston earthquake, and epidemics of fever and cholera. Nations never stop. They march on toward salvation or demolition. And why should I stop! I chime for the national holidays. I toil for the mighty dead. I must go on! I must go on! Tick, tock! Ticz, tock!' There may be a difference of a tew seconds or a few minutes in the timebut it will be a serious occasion when ext Saturday night about the same hour the family clocks, and the city clocks, and the national clocks strike one! two! toree! four! five! six! seven! eight! nine! ten! sleven! twelve!

Sorry am I to have 189! depart this life. It has been a good year. What bright days! What starry nights! What harvests! What religious convocations! What triumphs of art and science and invention and enterprise and religion! But, also, how secret it has been with sorrows! What pillows hot with fever that could not be cooled! What graves fever that could not be cooled! What graves opening wide enough to take down beauty and strength and usefulness! What cotogenarians putting down the staff of earthly pilgrimage and taking the crown of heavenly reward! What coildren, as in Bible time, crying: "My head, my head! And they carried him to his mother, and he sat on her knees until noon and then died." This year went the chief poet of England and the coild poet of America. Our John G. Whilter—wreat in literature and simple as a childpoet of America. Our John G. Whitter—great in literature and simple as a child-for did I not spend an afternoon with him in a barn in the Alfrondscka, and in the evening we played blindman's buff, he tying over my eyes the handkerchief while the notel pariors rang with the merry making? And Tennyson, this year gone—he who for this particular season of the year wrote:

Ring on', wild bells, to the wild size,
The flying cloud, the frosty light.
The year is dying in the night.
Ring out, wild bells, and let him die.

at the birth of the Son of God there was celestial agitation, and my only won ler is that, instead of one star or one meteor giving signal, all worlds did not make demonstration. Why not other worlds take interest in the event when Christ came from another world and another world was to get the souls that would be saved by this celestial descent? It would have been a stellar disgrace, an astronomical scandal, if, when the Golinead lay compresse i in the form of an infant, something from above had not pointed down, as much as to say: "There He is! Look, all earth and heaven! Look, all time and all eternity?"

You see, the birth at Bethlehem must have been mo another world always ha i miltreated its good and great friends. Joseph hurled into the pit, shadrach put into the fire, Jeremiah lowered into a dungeon, Divid hounded from the throne, Enjah compelled to starve.

I advised that you divide this season into trious birthday, the second a chapter of anunual decadence and the third a chapter of an-nual decadence and the third a chapter of chronological introduction—and this last chapter we have reached. In olden times there was a style of closing an old year and opening a new one that was very suggestive.
The family would sit up until twelve o'clock at night, and when the clock struck twelve the family would all 22 to the front door of the house, take down the bar and turn back the lock down the bar and turn back the lock and swing the door wide open to let the old year out and new year in. And that is what we are going to do. With the same measured step that time has kept since it started it will come to our door in the closing night of this week. With what spirit shall we let the new year in? I have already indicated that it is to be one of the greatest years of all chronology, "Why?" you ask. "Have you any forebodings or premoni-"Have you any forebodings or premoni-tions?" No. "Are you expecting the millen-nium this year." No! "Why, then, say this about the coming year?" For the simple reason that I find as the years go by they become more and more eventful. Compare the Nineteenth century with the Eighteenth

Compare the first half of this century with the last half. The surges of this ocean of time are rolling higher and higher. The forces of right and wrong are rapidly mul-tiplying, and their struggles must be inten-sited. It is a chronological fact that we are all the time coming nearer to the world's edenization first and then to its incineration, to its redemption and its demoli-tion. And so I expect that 1893 will be a greater year than 1892. Its wedding belis will be merrier. Its obsequies will be sad-Its scientific discoveries more brilliant. Its properties more significant. Its opening more grand, Its termination more stupendous. Look out for 1893! Let printers have in their cases of type plenty of exclamation points to set up a sudden paragraph. Let the conservatories have profusion of flowers that can be twisted into garlands. Let churches have plenty of room for increased assemblages. Let men and women have more religion to meet the vacillations and the exigencies, and the demands and the raptures and the woes of this coming 1893. In what mood shall we open the door of the new year? With faith, strong faith, buoyant faith, triumphant faith, God will see you through. His grace will be sufficient if you trust Him. You can go to Him at any time and find sym

My little child got hurt one morning dur-ng her mother's absence. We looked after he case as well as we could. Toward night her mother returned, and for the first time the child cried and cried vociferously. Some one said to her: "What do you cry for? You did not cry all day." Her reply was, "There was no one to cry to." And so you sometimes suppress your trouble because there is no full resource of earthly sympathy. But I rejoice to tell you that in God you always have some one to cry to. will condole and help in every crisis.

now, let me unstrap that knapsack of care from your shoulders. Come prosperity or adversity, come wedding or burial, come health or sickness, come life or death, come time or eternity, all's well, all's well! Keep your heart right and all else will be right. Men and women have sometimes given strange whimsical directions in regard to what shall be done with their hearts after death. Robert Bruce ordered his heart to be sent to the Holy Land for burial. The Earl of Leicester ordered his heart sent to Brackley Hospital. Isabella, daughter of the Earl of Pembroke, died at Berkkampstead, but ordered her heart taken to Tewkesbury Cathedral. Lord Windsor, dying in a foreign land, ordered his heart inclosed in lead and sent to England for burial in the chapel of Bradenham. Now what shall we decree for our heart? That it be the Lord's, and then it makes no difference what else becomes of it. Living and dying, may it all be His.

Thus in three chapters I have counseled home to spend the bolidays, and the house is rummaged from garret to cellar, and the scanes of childhood are rehearsed, and we laugh till the tears come as we talk over some boyish or girlish freak or cry over some boyish or girlish freak or cry over some old trouble ended; but the heartswings back again to mirth, for it does not take half a second for a tear of the eye to strike the smile of the lip. For a few years the grand-children make the holidays merry. One of the many uses of grandchildren is to keep the old folks young. Then after a few years the old folks young. Then after a few years the annual gathering at the old homestead is half broken up, for father or mother is

About two years after (for there are generally about two years between the time of their going) the other half of the holiday season is troken up. Then the old house goes into the possession of strangers, and the sons and daughters by that time have the sons and daughters by that time have homes of their own. They plant their own Christmas trees and bang up their own chil-dren's stockings, and twine their own holly and mistletoe, and have their own good times. They will perhaps be riding out on some of those holidays either in sieigh or carriage twenty or thirty years from along the places where we slumber the last sleep, and may we have been so considerate and sympathetic in our demeanor toward them now that they will then say one to another as they pass the silent mounds of the village graveyard or city cemetery, "There rests as kind a father an i as kind a mother as ever wished their children a merry Christmas and a happy new year."

Meanwhile we, their parents and grandparents, will, I hope, through the atonement of our blessed Lord, be keeping holidays livelier and higher up; in the presence of the very Christ whose birth the earthly Christmas commemorates, and of the 'Ancient of Days' who saw the first year open, and will see the last year close; in companionship with the ever-widening circle of heavenly kindred, many already there and many soon to come, and the tables of that festivity will purple with the grapes of Eachol, and redden "with the new wine of the kingdom," and glow with "twelve manner of truits" from the trees of life, and the gits of those holidays will be mansions and thrones and crowns of giory that never fade away. Oh, that these delightful holi-days of earth may fit us for those more delightful holidays of beaven!

Treasures in an Antique Desk.

"A friend of mine in Philadelphia has a treasure in an antique writing desk that has proved its own age," said S. G. Hayden, of Richmond, Va., at the Palmer House. "I was visiting him the other day when he was examining the desk and made an important discovery. The thing has a great number of little apartments for papers, but apparently did not contain as much space as it should. We were examining it together when we noticed a hidden spring, and what seemed to be a panel proved to be another drawer, which he opened and found to his amazement and gratification that it contained an autobiography of Thomas Chalkley, published as the title page showed, by 'B. Franklin' in 1749. The drawer also contained an amount of Continental greenbacks. The antiquity of the desk was not only proved but the other valuable relics were found."-Chicago Herald.

There is a wonderful grapevine at Gailac, a town of Southern France. Although the plant is only ten years from the cutting, it has yielded as many as 1287 bunches of fine fruit in a single year. There is but one other vine in cultivation that is known to excel this prolific shrub, and that is the historical vine at Hampton Court, England, which was planted in 1768. In one year this noted vine has borne 2500 bunches. The fruit from this vine is kept for the exclusive use of Queen Victoria and her house hold, the surplus being made into wine for the same purpose. -St. Louis Repub
