Their manthing, when the work is done, or the penses, the commissioners have issued money. In Centre we have a large balance on hand, with a rate of millage as low as it is possible to make it.

A close examination of the statement will show that wherever it was possible to cut down expense it was done, and that the commissioners have, in making repairs on buildings and improvements in grounds, been as economical as it was possible to be and have the work well done.

No money belonging to the several districts for road, school or poor purposes has been kept from the districts to which it belonged. The authorities of the several districts were urged by both the commissioners and the county treasurer to come in and get their money.
