The following is the full text of the address delivered by Col. A. K. Mc-Clure, editor of the Philad Times at memorial meeting of the Bellefonte Bar Association, upon the death of ex-Gov. Andrew G. Curtin:

COL, A. K. MC'CLURE'S ADDRESS.

CHAIRMAN AND FRIENDS: I feel that an occasion of this kind cannot be expressed by stated expressions. It is one on which the heart alone should speak: I am not here to pass an eulogy upon A. G. Curtin in his own community, where every man, woman and child have smiled at his presence. I am here to sympathize with you by expressing that which I feel in common with you, after I have for almost a round half century been his friend and he has been mine. In the commutations of friendship in Bellefonte and social life it is a story that is well worth cherishing. For half a century almost he has never had a conflict in which I have not been by his side; I have never, in my humble way, had one myself in which he was not always by my side and friend. Before I was yet a voter I was a conferce in the congressional conference of this district held at Lewistown and with all the enthusiasm of a boy I voted and struggled to nominate A. G. Curtin for congress, and from that time until the present, with all the voluminous history we have written and all the changes we have witnessed, there has never been a cloud upon that friendship, there has never been a halt in the devotion of his friendship. He is one man who in departing from us makes me feel as if I were left almost alone and my brief spans will aso feel that there is wanting one support, one friend that in all my life I have always felt was certain and always exprished.

If there are those here who sorrow for A. G. Curtin as his friend, let me say that there is not a heart in this andience that sorrows more than mine. Even in the home that is desolate that I have just left, there is not a heart in this andience that sorrows more than mine. Even in the home that is read that it could give to the sorrowing widow was simply this, that he has but a little gone before us. I cannot trust myself, Mr. Chairman, to speak further upon this subject.

What shall I say of Governor Curtin's achievements? What has he done? The

Mr. Chairman, to speak further upon this subject.

What shall I say of Governor Curtin's achievements? What has he done? The story of his life is familiar to every school boy of the commonwealth and it is cherished by every intelligent citizen. It is worshipped by every soldier and soldier's child in the land and yet the chapter of his efforts and his struggles in the great emergency through which he passed can never be written. That story, Mr. Chairman, can never be told: language shall be inadequate to convey to the people of this great commonwealth the trials through which Governor Curtin passed when the life of the Republic was trembling in the balance. You have in your midst the gallant and armless soldiers; you have also a beloved Ex-Governor who goes upon his crutches, who lent his aid in the great emergency in defense of this nation. With all their perils and all their responsibilities, they could not know how the governor of this commonwealth was compelled at times, when there seemed to be no silver lining to the cloud of despair, how he was compelled to struggle and grope his way to maintain the government of the people. The young men of to day have no conception how terrible were these perils; they read the story of the bravery of our soldiers who fought the battles of the Republic and won, them and brought back their banners in triumph, but they know nothow, as I have seen, the Execu-

It enacted more than 200 laws for the benefit of the people in different sections of the country.

It placed upon the statute books the mest drastic measure against combinations, trusts, and monopolies engaged in foreign commerce ever enacted.

It provides for; an income tax upon the wealth of the country, thereby placing upon the shoulders of the rich a due share of the burdens of Government.

It reformed the abuses in the various departments, and by the aid of the heads of the same [dispensed with useless positions, thereby reducing the salary list more than $1,000,000 annually.

It repealed that most obnoxious, ill-formed, and oppressive measure called the McKinley law, and substituted in its stead a measure of revenue reform that will revive trade and restore prosperity.

It recognized the dignity of labor by the same security of the same for the protect of the responsibilities of the nation. Itself, down the desired that order from the protect of WHAT THE DEMOCRATIC CONGRESS DID | tive of this Commonwealth charged with reof the Pennsylvania Reserve Corps down Pennsylvania Avenue to protect the capitol of the nation. This was but one of the many.

Our State was exposed of all other States most to war. The policy of the country had never been defined; there were no records in all history to guide it; the relation of the state to the national government had been in disputation for three-quarters of a century and never decided. There was never in the history of past government a body or relation of states such as these, for there never was a republic like this, not even Greece, Carthage or Rome that we read of as representatives in our histories, but they were simply the free democracy, that renewal from freedom to depotism and they deified a man to-day and crucified him tomorrow. This alone has been a government of liberty and law and he defined it, and if you will turn back to his inaugural address and to his first message to the first legislature is two brief paragraphs, you will find there that he laid down the policy that guided the nation through all its bloody struggle and that there is not a line therein that has not been fulfilled in blood and recorded in history in our fundamental laws. There are few who can tell of the high measure of the achievements of Governor Curtin and soon those who can tell will have passed away and joined him beyond the divide; but there is more than enough of history to make his name ever stand amongst the most brilliant of Pennsylvanians in every achievement of human greatness. I honor him not only as a friend, I honor him not only as a war governor, who achieved more than all men of like position, but I honor him, Mr. Chairman, above all, that he has reared the highest and most lustreless monument to humanity that our state has ever known or that any state has fixed in history. One brief sentence of but few words spoken to him by two little wais when on his way to Thanksgiving services, "father was killed in the war." This trembling utterance came from those who asked aims on that Thanksgiving

It was his act and his alone; it was he who pressed it upon the legislature.

It provided for the taxation, by states, counties, and municipalities, of more than three hundred millions of taxable values which had heretofore not only ben exempt from taxation, but had enabled unscrupulous persons by fraudulent practices, to escape from their just share of the burdens of domestic Government.

It removed from the statutes the Federal election law, the most odious and undemocratic measure ever enactage.

It was his act and his alone; it was he who pressed it upon the legislature.

There was not a sorrowing soldier throughout the land whether wounded or sick who was not ministered to by those who were sent by the Governor of this state, and where the body of a dead soldier could be found by the authority of the state it was brought home for sepulchre with those who loved him, and even to-day after a generation has passed, we find the beneficaries of his humanity to the soldier in our state until all orphans of the soldiers have grown up and their children have to day blessed the dead who made them the grandest beneficence of humanity ever shown by any people in the history of civilized government. This record he has written, which alone, independent of all his achievements of greatness in his trials of war, this achievement alone must stand out single from all like achievements of men in our land. Who could wish a grander tribute to his memory than to have such a story told over his grave 2. Government. The provided from amongst you. You will no long to the land whether wounded or sick who was not ministered to by those who were sent by the Governor of this state, and where the body of a dead soldier could be found by the authority of the state it was brought home for sepulchre with those who loved him, and even to-day after a generation has passed, we find the beneficaries of his humanity to the soldier in our state until all orphans to the soldier thouse who lave were shown by any people in the history of civilized ed, and thereby restored to the people of the sovereign States full and complete control over their elections, free from the intervention of Supervisors and Deputy Marshals, whose sole duties, under Republican supremacy, had been to intimidate, arrest, and imprison electors before they had cast their ballots.

to us, that men are immortal and never die, and so of his achievements.

When the sun passes beyond your mountains and sets in the far west and we call it night, the night is come, but throughout the long watches of the night, the God of day throws back his refulgence upon the stars and his light is eternal, and so of a life like that of Governor Curtin. We bear his body to the tomb to-day but we bury not his memory, we bury not his achievements, his records, his examples. They will remain with us, lustrous as the silver stars of the night that never permit darkness to come upon the earth, and so from generation to generation in Pennsylvania will the memory of this man endure, will the love for him be perpetual, and as those who come generation after generation to hear the story of his greatness, of his devotion, his liberality, his humanity toward all mankind will dwell in the sweet memories of Pennsylvania and while the higher cliffs of his mountain home shall stand sentinel around his tomb, wherever there shall be the altar and worshiper of free government, these will be the lovers and worshipers of the memory of A. G. Curtin.

Governor Curtin's Will.

The following is a copy of Governor Curtin's will probated in the courts of Centre county last Thursday morning. It was made September 4, 1894, and is one of the briefest and most compact documents on record:

"I give, devise and bequeath unto my beloved wife Catherine W. Curtin, her heirs and assigns forever, all my property, real, personal and mixed of what nature or kind soever, and wheresoever the same shall be at the time of my
