

ORATORS SUMMARIZE.

Messrs. Harvey and Horr Review the Financial Debate.

BOTH RETAIN THEIR OPINIONS.

Though Holding Opposing Views, Each Contentant Has Proved to His Own Satisfaction That the System He Advocates Is the True Solution of the Money Question.

CHICAGO, Aug. 7.—Following is a synopsis of the summing up of the Horr-Harvey debate by Roswell G. Horr: The object of this debate was to determine if it would be wise for our nation to throw open its mints to the free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1 when the civilized nations of the world refuse to join in such action. My opponent proposed to prove that such a course is advisable. I denied the advisability of such action.

His statement that the primary money only is the measure of value he has not even attempted to sustain. He based his whole argument on the proposition that the silver dollar was in 1792 made the only unit or measure of value. I have shown conclusively that our forefathers attempted to establish bimetallicism and provided for two units of value, one of gold and one of silver, always naming gold first, and that up to 1834 the silver standard alone was used. That after the gold standard came into use the silver dollar has never been used as the measure of value in the United States.

Mr. Harvey next based his case upon the assumption that the law of 1873 was a crime, and stated that it had its origin in fraud and its birth through bribery and corruption. He introduced no evidence in support of any one of these positions. Thus he stands convicted by his own statements of an effort to deceive the people.

His assertion that option of the debtor to pay in other metal causes the cheaper metal to be used is true, but such option does not restore its relative commercial value. On the contrary, it drives the dearer metal out of use. History proves that the use of a single standard is the only means by which both metals can be kept in circulation.

The gold unit is not responsible for the fall in prices. Mr. Harvey utterly failed to show a fall in the price of a single article which is not fully accounted for by the cheaper cost of production, improved transportation or increased supply. During the discussion Mr. Harvey cites Roman history, with its many evils. But he inadvertently makes an admission as to the great value of banking facilities, which refutes all his other assertions against such systems. He says: "It is a significant coincidence that the first glimmer of light only came with the invention of bills of exchange and paper substitutes, through which the scanty stock of the precious metals was increased in efficiency." Strange that it did not occur to him that this is "an entire give away" of his whole rant and fustian against banks.

The condition of the mass of the people of the United States has improved more rapidly since 1873 than during a similar number of years since the nation was born. Mr. Harvey endeavors to prove decreasing wages in the United States since 1873. He introduces only one statement in support of his position; that was the evidence of a single man for one trade in the city of Omaha. On the other hand to prove that they are advancing I introduced the investigation of United States Commissioner of Labor Mulhall, who showed that the average annual wages in manufacturing industries have risen from $288 in 1870 to $559 for each person in 1890.

Mr. Harvey virtually admits that the action which he proposes will put this nation on a silver basis and drive gold out of this country. I showed conclusively that this would work injury to seventeen million people who work for wages. Mr. Harvey has shown that benefits will come to no person except silver mine owners and insolvent debtors.

Following is a synopsis of W. H. Harvey's summary: The debate settles in my judgment the following propositions: That gold and silver is the money of the constitution. That the silver dollar was the unit of value in our coinage system fixed by the act of 1792. Mr. Horr admits this. That both silver and gold were the measures of value of all other property until 1873, and the debtor has a right to pay in either metal. That the act of 1873 was surreptitiously passed. That for all time of which we have a knowledge, gold and silver were treated equally as money, and until 1873 the commercial value of the two metals was substantially at a parity with the legal ratio. That prices of all property are substantially at the present time one-half of what they would be under the bimetallic system. That all the silver coined since Feb. 12, 1873, has been token money.

I believe those who read and carefully digest the debate will conclude that I have made good all the propositions set forth in my opening statement. Mr. Horr said that when gold or silver was the unit the quantity in a dollar could not be worth either more or less than itself. I refer him to recent market quotations in New York, when gold bullion was selling at a small premium, which was accounted for at the time as purchases made by a gold syndicate to prevent gold from seeking the mints.

It was once supposed that labor saving improvements and inventions would lessen the necessary toil of man, and there was a promise of a day to come when with little labor all would be provided for, and humanity as a whole would be benefited. Has it had that result? All will answer that it has not. And yet if there were no defect in our civilization inventions would have the effect first intended for them. We are sufficiently advanced in this respect now to provide all the people of the world with the comforts of life by one hour's work each day by each individual, while the remaining hours not devoted to sleep would be used in the promotion of human happiness and the advancement of the human race.

The Irish Revolutionary Convention. NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—The convention to consider the new movement for liberating Ireland by force of arms will be held in Chicago, in the hall of the Young Men's Christian association, Sept. 24, 25 and 26. The movement has already been endorsed by many Irish societies of different classes. The Irish Nationalists and the A. O. H. are as one in regard to it, and the coming convention will be unquestionably the Irish leaders say, the largest ever held in this country in connection with the Irish question. Over 2,000 delegates have already signified their intention of attending the coming gathering.

Keep it Regularly.

A man who inserts a small advertisement twice a year, and then looks for a rush of business for the next twelve months is like the fellow who takes a bath on New Year's Day and expects perfect health during the remainder of the year. Regularity and continuity are essential elements in both and an "ad" unless inserted to make known something of special importance will not pay if it is not kept constantly before the people. Names of business men and the location of their stores are soon forgotten when the "ads" are taken from the columns of the local newspaper and this the wide awake merchant never fails to remember. Doing business upon the theory that everybody knows him, knows what he sells and where his store is, has been rejected by every up to date seller of goods in the land.

Track Sulky.

Mr. Frank J. Gibbs, of Tyrone, who is at present located at the Altoona driving park, has completed a patent track sulky that is expected to revolutionize the trotting world. The sulky is so constructed that by a mere pressure of the foot in rounding the turn the sulky axle on the outside will raise and the inside lower, practically confining to the circular motion, and when the straight line is gained a similar pressure of the foot brings the sulky back to its natural position. The wheels are ball-bearing, pneumatic tire and are fifty-two inches in height.

Judge and Prisoner Changed Places.

A jury composed of the best men in the town of Perry, O. T., rendered a novel verdict. It was a case of drunkenness and disorderly conduct, and the verdict reads as follows: "We find the defendant not guilty as charged, but we find the judge of this court guilty of the offense charged against the defendant, and that the cost in this case be assessed against him." Since this verdict was rendered the judge has been arrested for intoxication.
