TOMATOES FOR THE GREENHOUSE. A Report on Varieties Tested at the Vermont Experiment Station.

L. R. Jones, writing from the Vermont station to Rural New Yorker, gives this information concerning tomatoes for greenhouse culture. He says:

The Essex Hybrid is and has been the standard variety with us for forcing. It has medium size, smooth and firm fruit, and yields as well as if not better than any other variety we have ever tried. It has as little black rot as any excepting some of the newer varieties.

The Early Minnesota has done well

The Early Minnesota has done well in our house this season, but as this is our first trial of it we don't wish to be too positive in praising its merits. It has some very meritorious qualities, was the first to ripen, both in the house and garden, and was only very slightly af-fected with the rot. It bears a large crop of medium size, smooth, round and firm frnit, which is of the very hear to follow the second of the details of the very hear to follow the second to the sec firm fruit, which is of the very best min frant, which is too seedy to suit some people. As to meatiness, it is not up to standard, whereas the Essex Hybrid may be considered as near the standard

Wasted Time and Force.

Not long since we saw a New England farmer plowing. His fields were small and surrounded by big stone walls. His team barely got started before they were stopped by a big wall that marked a wide lane or street running through the farm. At least 15 per cent of time and force were wasted in tarning.
