For our own ustification, we may appeal to one church or a dozen, to one man or a hundred. government, there is no authority in any tribunal that may be thus selected, especially a tribunal chosen by only one party. The decision of such a tribunal may have a moral weight, but it has no legal authority. There is nothing official about committees, even if mutually chosen * * * * As each family is a separate government by itself, so is each congregation. No orther family on earth has a right to come in and dictate to me and my family, and no other congrega-tion on earth has the right to come in and dictate with reference to the affairs membership. Many other authorities were put in evidence before the Master; the decided weight of them tends to establish the rule in this particular denomination, that each congregation is absolutely independent of any legal control by any other congregation, or by the clergy or officers of such other congregation. What are the admitted facts here? Against the protests of defendants, delegations from Eagleville and Lock Haven churches, two ministers, one from Bellefonte and one from Williamsport, met with members of this congregation outside the church, and by a vote desposed these defendants and elected in their places part of these plaintiffs, and approved and continued in office part of them. Where, in the rules of the church organization, exists the semblance of authority for this proceeding? The Master does not point out, and we have failed to, find it in the evidence. It is said that Leathers and one of the Gardners were present at one of the hearings before the 25th of June, and had notice of the meeting; this is denied; but assume it to be true, both objected to the meeting when held, and refused to take part. We decline to consider the arguments bearing on the fairness and and desire for peace displayed by the re-spective parties; discussion of this sub-ject, would neither determine the existence of authority in the meeting nor the want of it. In the exercise of such high authority as was attempted here, parties must point us to a clear "thus saith our church law." We are of opinion, the meeting of 25th June, was wholly without authority to depose the old officers or to lect new oues. But, it is asked, if the members repre-sented by these plaintiffs be in a majority, how shall they obtain the rights of a majority? We reply, by exercising them as members of the congregation, and as the majority for more than sixty years has exercised them; the reply to this, perhaps, is, those in possession will ex-clude us from lawful participation in con-gregational government. We are averse to assuming that any of the members of this congregation, now that their lawful course of action is pointed out to them, will act with lawlessness; but if peace among members of a Christian church be impossible, then the Courts are open to the wrong members, as members, and But, it is asked, if the members repre-
