No OUTLAWS.—Mr. Peter Sones, who lives along the mountain, below Dales Summit, has been causing considerable excitement down that way of late. He has the people about there nearly scared out, by pretending there are outlaws in the vicinity. Every night he goes out and shoots around and says that he saw some of them sneaking around. One night he was out and claims that they fired four shots after him. We know it is all false, and he had better be a little careful or he will get himself into trouble for disturbing the people around him.

There were quite a number took advantage of the special train, that ran down as far as Coburn, on Saturday night and went down to Bellefonte to see and join in the parade. Some went empty and returned full. Not of silver but—

Clement went to town Saturday evening and had for his expense the political parade. This excuse did not last long, as he was parading but not a political parade. Clem. will you have a stew or "fry."

WHO IS HE?

Story of a New York "Meanest Man," who is of the 400.

We all know him. His name is in the list of the "Four Hundred." He is prominent in church work. His wealth is counted by millions. Not many years ago his brother was at the head of a great manufacturing establishment, which he had built up in this city, and from which he derived an enormous income. Illness laid him low, his doctors said he would die within a week and he sent for this "meanest man."

"Brother," he said. "I shall be dead in a few days. I want to turn my property over to you. Take everything and do what good you can in the world."

So the business was given to the "meanest man," and preparations were made for the funeral of the rich brother. He, however, fooled the doctors and got well. His first move was an attempt to recover his property from his brother, but the latter held on, and has held on ever since. He captured the whole plant, and has it yet, and that man who gave it to him on his death-bed is now dependent on him for support.—New York Press.

BUILT A RAILROAD ON FAITH.

What the Confidence of a Farmer Has Done in Minnesota.

Perhaps the most curious incident growing out of opposition to railway monopoly is found up in Minnesota, and is described in the Chicago Times-Herald. A farmer named Hines, who owned nothing in the world but a quarter section of mortgaged land and a spavined team of horses, suddenly concluded that the country was being robbed by railroads, and that the farmer must build a road of their own. He started out. The farmers did not have any money with which to subscribe for stock, but they pledged so many days' work on the road. Others made a gift of the right of way. Still others went into the woods and cut ties. Farmer Hines was much ridiculed when he started his agricultural road, but he has stuck manfully to his task, and now the chances are the road will be actually built. He has 100 miles of right of way, pledges for the earthwork, and ties enough to cover the line. The road will run from Duluth west through the Red River Valley into North Dakota, opening up a new section of country. This is what an American farmer with a spavined team and faith in himself can do when he sets about it.

An Expert Confounded.

The Butte Inter Mountain tells a good gold dust story of George Wilson, who owned the famous Paris mine in Park county, Mont'. Wilson was visited by some Englishmen one day, among whom was an expert of the English pattern—one who knew all about mines and a great deal about everything else, in his own opinion. They wanted to see some of Wilson's gold, and he panned out some very fine colors for their edification. "But that isn't gold," pronounced the youthful expert, after a critical examination. "No dear fellow, I am a graduate of the English School of Mines, and I know gold when I see it, you know. That is iron." Wilson didn't say much. He just leaned over and took the alleged expert confidently by the shoulder. "Mebbe it isn't," he said, "but don't go and give it away to those fellows down at the Denver mint, for I have been selling the stuff to them for gold all along."

A Hustler

That is the kind of a man who succeeds in business in these days of close profits and strong competition. The hustler gets a move on, lets the public know what he is doing. He pushes his business instead of his unpaid bills and bad accounts pushing him. The hustler lets the public know what he has in market; he invites trade. He does it to the best advantage by an intelligent and judicious use of space in a newspaper. It costs money to advertise. Yes indeed, but that attracts attention, brings new customers and increases your trade ultimately. The success in advertising consists in keeping "everlastingly at it."

Printers ink made John Wanamaker a millionaire, and he does more and more advertising each year. He seems to understand the business. Do you grasp the idea?

1500 copies of the Centre Democrat are printed each week. These reach at least 4000 readers in Centre county every week. It goes right to the homes—is a family paper. Don't you think you could increase your business by an advertisement in its columns. Argument is useless.

Get a hustle on, increase your business, advertise in the Centre Democrat.
