

THE FIRST BATTLE

A Review of Hon. William J. Bryan's Book.

MRS. BRYAN ADDS SKETCHES.

Devoted to His Connection with the Silver Movement, Bimetallism, the "Bolting Democrats," Trusts and the Civil Service—Poem by Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

CHICAGO, Jan. 26.—The last pages of "The First Battle," the Hon. W. J. Bryan's book, have gone to press. The book embodies a story of the campaign of 1896, its important events and issues, and includes the most noteworthy incidents of Mr. Bryan's famous tour. It also contains the principal addresses and documents relating to the silver movement and some of Mr. Bryan's speeches. One of the interesting features of the book is the sketch written by Mrs. Bryan, who thus describes their first meeting:

"My personal knowledge of Mr. Bryan dates from September, 1879. He was then entering upon his junior year. I saw him first in the parlors of the young ladies' school which I attended at Jacksonville. He entered the room with several other students, was taller than the rest, and attracted my attention at once. He was neatly though not fastidiously dressed, and stood firmly and with dignity. I noted particularly his smile. In later years this smile has been the subject of considerable comment. Upon one occasion a heartless observer was heard to remark, 'That man whippers in his ear,' but this was a cruel exaggeration."

As to the criticism that Mr. Bryan had not distinguished himself as a lawyer she says: "Those who thus complain should consider that he entered the practice at 23 and left it at 30, and during that period began twice and twice became more than self supporting. With the time of his election to congress his practice was in a thriving condition, and fully equal to that of any man in the city."

The early chapters are devoted to an account of Mr. Bryan's connection with the silver movement and the development of the silver sentiment. Then follow chapters devoted to the Republican and Democratic national conventions, including the memorable contest over the Chicago platform. Referring to the fact that the concluding sentence of his convention speech had been widely criticized, Mr. Bryan says:

"I had used the idea (cross of gold and crown of thorns) in substantially the same form in a speech in congress, but did not recall the fact when I used it in the convention. A portion of the speech was extemporaneous and its arrangement entirely so, but parts of it had been prepared for another occasion."

In a chapter entitled "The Triple Demand for Financial Independence," bimetallism is thus defined: "In a speech made in Ohio, I quote from memory: 'The parity between gold and silver can only be maintained by the use of gold as a standard with silver coined in limited quantities as a limited legal tender. This can properly be called bimetallism.'"

"This definition of bimetallism has within the last four years become quite common among those who favor the gold standard, but are not willing to be known as monometallists. Bimetallism means two-metalism just as certainly as the word biped means an animal with two feet. It means the use of two metals as standard money, and to be standard money they must be treated alike. If to use gold as a standard with silver coin in limited quantities as a legal tender is bimetallism, then England now has bimetallism. Many insist upon calling themselves bimetallists who were unwilling to vote for bimetallism, without an international agreement. This made it necessary to adopt some means of distinguishing between independent bimetallists and international bimetallists."

In a chapter devoted to "the bolting Democrats," Mr. Bryan says: "The only criticism which I desire to record here is that the gold Democrats sought to use the party name for purposes of deception. The party name belongs to the majority of the party, and the minority cannot fairly, honestly or honorably use that name in such a way as to mislead the voters. I had at all times defended the sovereign right of the citizen to follow his conscience and his judgment in political matters, and to make his party affiliations conform to his convictions, but a fraud attempted against the voters is no more defensible than a fraud attempted in a business transaction."

As to the statement in Mr. McKinley's letter of acceptance that the "mills should be opened instead of the mints," Mr. Bryan says: "This was an epigrammatic sentence, and did considerable service in turning public attention from the money question to the tariff question."

He says this about the trusts: "Our country has, in my judgment, much to fear from the political influence of large corporations. This country is falling more and more into the hands of corporations, and since a lawyer receives both his reputation and experience from his practice, the attorneys for the great corporations come to be considered the leading attorneys at their respective bars. It may even happen that judges upon the bench will retain after appointment the bias acquired in corporation practice."

Regarding the civil service, he says: "I do not believe that life tenure is, as a rule, a wise thing in a government like ours. The fact that the people make frequent changes in their public officials in case of elective offices is conclusive proof that life tenure is not popular. If they desired to have their public servants hold office for life they would manifest that desire by keeping elective officials in office permanently. As long as human nature remains as it is, it will not be safe to place public officials in a position where they are entirely independent of those whom they serve."

One of the last chapters is given up to "The Election Returns," and in this Mr. Bryan says: "As the evening progressed the indications pointed more and more strongly to defeat, and by 11 o'clock I realized that while the returns from the country might change the result, the success of my opponent was more than probable. Confidence resolved itself into doubt, and doubt in turn gave place to resignation. Then vanished from my mind the vision of a president in the White House perplexed by the cares of state, and in the contemplation of the picture of a citizen by his friends free from official responsibility I fell asleep."

The book ends with a poem entitled "An Inspiration," written by Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

PENNSYLVANIA LEGISLATURE

The House Passes a Resolution Indorsing the Cameron Cuban Resolution.

HARRISBURG, Jan. 26.—Speaker Boyer stated he would not be ready to announce the standing committee's report tomorrow, and many members preferred to wait until then to present their legislation. There is not likely to be much business done by each house before the committees are appointed.

After the introduction of a number of bills in the house Mr. W. C. Smith, of Bedford, introduced the following resolution: Resolved, That the house of representatives of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, representing directly the citizens of this commonwealth, approve and commend the resolution of United States Senator J. Donald Cameron favoring the acknowledgment of the independence of Cuba by the government of the United States, and recommending the good offices of the government to be used to secure peace in Cuba, or the basis of the independence of the island.

Mr. Scott, Philadelphia, moved to refer the resolution to the committee on federal relations, but Mr. Smith opposed this because he believed that the house ought to have a chance to vote it up or down. The motion was carried and the house adjourned.

In the senate Mr. Brown, of Philadelphia, introduced last night the six bills amending and extending the present charter of Philadelphia, known as the Bullitt bill, and the new bill relating to franchises. These bills were prepared by the Municipal League, of Philadelphia, and are backed by that organization.

The following bills were also presented: To authorize any lay judge of the several courts in the commonwealth having jurisdiction to grant liquor licenses to transfer them during vacation; to do away with all party conventions and make nominations by direct vote of the people, the primaries to be conducted by the election of officers of the general elections, and under the Baker ballot law, and to increase the salary of the secretary of the state board of health from $2,000 to $3,500.

The appointments made by the governor since the last session of the legislature were confirmed.

ITEMS OF STATE NEWS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—Fourth class postmasters were yesterday appointed for Pennsylvania as follows: Schaefferstown, M. L. Hartman, vice T. Frank Ream, resigned; Shoemakersville, A. B. Lesser, vice Charles Hoffman, resigned.

PITTSBURG, Jan. 26.—The executive committee of the Coal Miners' association has asked for a conference with the operators in this city on the 29th inst., to take action to improve the ruinous condition of affairs now existing. The conference will be followed by a general convention of operators and miners the early part of the following week.

PITTSBURG, Jan. 27.—There was one case of death in this city as a result of the cold weather. Mrs. Mary Morris, of Homestead, while waiting for a street car, was overcome by the intense cold and fell on the street. She was removed to a physician's office, where she died. The woman was on her way to a funeral and was in a delicate condition.

NORRISTOWN, Pa., Jan. 26.—The team of Max Finkle, of Blue Bell, was struck by a freight train on the Plymouth branch of the Philadelphia and Reading railway at Flourtown crossing. The train, in charge of Engineer Kimmel, of this borough, was going along at a moderate rate of speed, when it suddenly crashed into the team, striking the wagon and knocking it into smithereens. When he alighted from the engine Kimmel expected to find a dead man, but instead found Finkle lying in the road, only slightly injured.

HOLLIDAYSBURG, Pa., Jan. 27.—National Bank Examiner Bingham, of Philadelphia, acting under the direction of the comptroller of the currency, will today transfer the broken First National bank of Hollidaysburg to the new organization, which will open the bank with 100 per cent of new capital. Prothonotary J. L. Hartman will be president and J. G. Swope, of Mt. Pleasant, Pa., cashier. This bank was closed by a run on Dec. 14. The Martinsburg Deposit bank and the Williamsburg bank, which were branches, will not resume.

SHAMOKIN, Pa., Jan. 26.—While Frederick Graeber and Miss Maud Gotthe were driving along the public road a half mile east of this place during the night the earth caved in, and they were precipitated into an abandoned mine working. The woman jumped from the carriage, but was unable to reach solid ground. She fell into the opening, and was buried beneath the earth. Mr. Graeber remained in the carriage and sustained a compound fracture of one leg, and it is believed that the other limb is broken. Both horses were crushed to death. Mr. Graeber is 25 years of age, and wealthy. Miss Gotthe was 18 years of age. They were to have been married within a few weeks. The cave is thirty feet deep.

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa., Jan. 25.—Miss Stevens, a school teacher of Cherry Hill township, this county, was made the victim of a fiendish assault Thursday, and as a consequence is lying in a critical condition at her home. The assault took place in the schoolroom soon after the scholars had been dismissed for the day. Miss Stevens was just preparing to make her departure when a masked man appeared before her, and pointing a revolver at her head threatened to shoot if she made any outcry. She screamed for assistance, and the man sprang forward and a struggle followed. The school teacher fought desperately, but was finally overpowered through the man's brute strength. The fellow then made his escape, and no trace of him has yet been found. The victim of the assault is only about 20 years of age. Her condition is so serious that it is impossible to learn anything that might lead to the capture of the man.

NEW BLOOMFIELD, Pa., Jan. 27.—The trial of Dr. Johnston, for the murder of Druggist Henry, at Duncannon, Pa., was resumed yesterday. Much of the testimony was for the purpose of proving the doctor insane. The sensation of the day came when Mrs. Johnston was placed on the stand. Though she had been badly wounded by her husband, it was plain that she meant to screen him as much as possible. She flatly contradicted several of the commonwealth's witnesses as to what was said at the time of the shooting. During all the time she was on the stand she carefully avoided meeting her husband's eyes. Most of that time, however, he sat with head bowed in his hands. Mrs. Johnston solemnly declared that there was no truth in the charge of her infidelity. She denied ever having stated that her husband had been unkind to her or had struck her. On several points her testimony will be contradicted by reliable witnesses in rebuttal.
