HORSEFLESH AS FOOD.

Time and Experience Past Disparaging Prejudice Against It.

The prejudice against horseflesh as food is one that time and experience are fast dissipating. In France and other Continental countries the use of this aliment is increasing so rapidly that great attention is given to the fattening of horses for the market. European societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals are interesting themselves in this subject, and are offering inducements to farmers to utilize their spare horses for food. It is conceded that the flesh of these animals is most excellent and nourishing. We all bear witness to this when we eat of the famous Saucisson de Lyons, which is now made almost exclusively of horseflesh. Liebig, Mohachott, and other chemists have demonstrated that the muscles of horses contain a greater percentage of albumen than those of oxen and cows. Smoked horse tongues are more delicate than those of the now extinct buffalo.

Europeans know their merit and accord them preference over all others. Horse tea is recommended to invalids as possessing greater tonic potency than beef tea. It is more savory and nourishing. The broth is the color of chicken bouillon. As soup stock it has the taste of that made from game and the same quantity of solid produces a larger quantity of liquid. Hippic meat requires a longer time to cook. When boiled it is apt to crumble; when roasted it is said to suggest venison. There is no part of the horse that cannot be utilized. Inferior portions may be employed in ragouts, whose flavor is much more piquant than when made from corresponding cuts of beef or mutton. The color of the meat when roasted or boiled is darker than that of the ox. As the grain is shorter and more brittle, greater skill is required in the carving. The decreasing use of horses as beasts of burden, through the employment of mechanical modes of propulsion, suggests the value of considering them seriously as an article of food. Every year there is more or less of a panic in regard to the short supply of beef. The horse, accorded the same care in selection and preparation for market, offers an entirely satisfactory substitute. Oleomargarine has kept the price of butter within reasonable limits. A general use of hippic meat would be an equally effective check upon the cost of beef. In France, where the latter sells for from 25 to 40 cents a pound, horse meat may be had for from 5 to 8 cents. The pot-au-feu, which is no longer boiled in thousands of French homes on account of the cost of beef, through the cheapness of hippic tissue has assumed its former importance in the domestic economy of that people.

The Bone Solo a Hoodoo.

"The bone solo," remarked an old minstrel performer to a Washington Star reporter, "though once very popular, is regarded as a hoodoo in the burnt cork profession and is never allowed any more under any circumstances. It is feared as much as the yellow clarinet, which, according to the superstitions of the show business, is one of the most fatal things that exists. The yellow clarinet not only induces bad—that is, poor business—but in addition to this it causes trouble among the performers, produces railroad accidents, and, in short, it winds performers and companies up. There was a time in the minstrel business when it was just as natural to have a bone solo played by some performer during the evening as it was to have a ballad sung, and the public took as kindly to one as it did to the other. There was scarcely any difference between bone solos. They all sounded about the same and the imitations were always stereotyped. Every bone soloist went through the same performance, and used a chair in the center of the stage to heighten the effect. Who of the hundreds and hundreds of thousands who have heard a bone solo played can forget the imitations of the starting and stopping of a railroad train, the battle, the charge and the repulse; sawing wood, and others equally familiar. Every bone soloist thought it was necessary to give an imitation of a two-forty horse going up the road, and especially to imitate the sounds of the trotter crossing a bridge. Haverly first put the ban on bone solos, and one of the clauses in the contracts he made with performers was that they would not under any circumstances while they were in his employ, either in private or public, attempt a bone solo. No minstrel performer can explain where the hoodoo comes in, but they fear it worse than any of the other omens of bad luck."

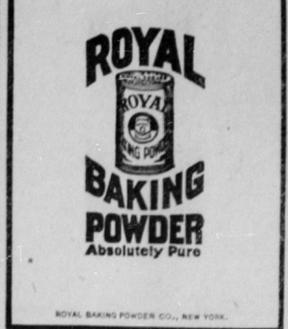

Topman Lattmann's Close Call.

William Lattmann had a miraculous escape at the Hortman mine, Belleville, Ill., recently. He is the topman. Supposing the cage was at the top he shoved a car into the shaft. He was drawn after it. In his downward plunge he caught the wire cable and saved himself. He hung there with the bottom of the shaft 300 feet below until almost exhausted. His cries were heard, the cable was drawn up, and he was rescued. His hands were terribly torn.

Do You Agree to This?

"The face of every woman is a history or a prophecy," said Mrs. Margaret Sangster, at the annual banquet of the Emma Willard Association recently. "I have no sympathy with women who try to efface wrinkles. A woman has no business to look younger than she is. There is a history in every wrinkle of her face."
