BRAVE HARRY.

(By a Penn Hall poet.)

A boy stood on the store-porch floor, A soldier he would be: He often said he'd go to war. Just the Spaniards there to see. He said he'd like to shoot them down, As long as he had a chance : But never thought that once away He could'nt speak with B—. When Charlie said "wou'd better not?"

When Charlie said, "you'd better not" He said "I'm bound to go;" And when his friends were told of it They said it was'nt so.

Then Frank spoke up and said to him, "I do not see at all, Why you should leave your many friends At this dear old town-Penn Hall."

"But if you wish to go I say: Be loyal, true, and brave. And fight the very best you can Until you reach the grave."

"Now when you're there all dressed in blue Remember what I said to you, Be a warrior, firm and bold, And always do as you are told "

At last to him good by was spoken, So off he went to war. They say her heart was almost broken. And she cried untill her eyes were sore.

At first she said, he's sick of it : But now he likes it well. How soon he will return again, Is pot for me to tell.

When he to park Mt. Greina came, He thought it very rough; But then he was'nt much to biame The hard-tack was so tough.

From there to Chickamauga Park, They moved the whole brigade: He wrote and said before the start, He wisked at home he'd stayed.

In course of time he liked it well, But the fever he did dread : And to his messmate did he say, I'm glad that I'm not dead,

But since the war is over, And no smoke he says he'll see: He'll feel as though in clover When at Penn Hall again he'll be.

From Chickamauga Park it's said They go to Lexington : And soon we hope the news to spread. The discharge of every one.

When he returns to this old town, The honors of war he'll carry. We'll tell the people all around Of brave, dear, noble, Harry.
