BUCKNELL, 5: STATE, 0.

The annual football game between the teams of Pennsylvania State college and Bucknell university, occurred at Williamsport on Saturday and was won by Bucknell. The day was a raw one, the field was sloppy in spots and these spots were always found just at the critical moment in some brilliant plays.

State was unable to hold Bucknell. When State did secure the ball she would lose it on downs. After 15 minutes of play Stauton made a brilliant 35-yard dash around State's left end, and was downed within 10 yards of the goal.

In the second half State developed great speed in getting into play, and Scholl made several brilliant dashes around Bucknell's right, and while big gains were made during the first few minutes of play, Bucknell soon succeeded in getting the ball.

THE SIESTA IN THE SOUTH.

Prevalent Still, But Rapidly Yielding to the Spread of the Spirit of Unrest.

Southern women who come to New York are always a little shocked and surprised that the afternoon nap does not flourish in these parts. It still does flourish, winter and summer, in most of the region south of Mason and Dixon's line.

But the restless habits of New York and New England are spreading southward. The "New Century" clubs, which have made such havoc of late years with the leisure of the American woman, have reached the southern cities and villages, and rudely broken in upon the afternoon nap.

Women brought up to the luxury of the nap now give over their afternoons to ransacking the encyclopaedia for information upon Dutch art, Russian social customs, Spanish literature, the Italian republics, or listening to what their sister women have learned by a similar process.

A physician and man of letters who maintains a rest cure, appropriately enough in Philadelphia, is said to be looking forward to a rich harvest of southern patients. As to the New York physicians, for years they have been vainly prescribing the afternoon nap to jaded women.—N. Y. Sun.

MARRIAGE OF "PERKINS."

An Object Lesson in the Economics of Matrimony in the City of Chicago.

They called him "Perk" for short, because they were too busy to get the "ins" to make the full name, says the Chicago Inter Ocean. Perk never did much in the way of supporting himself, but he let his married sister do the providing.

One Sunday recently Perk thought that life would be unbearable without his charmer, and, borrowing 20 cents from his sister, which was all the money she had, he came in from Bowmanville, found his innamorata, and to do the thing up in romantic style, they eloped to Wisconsin.

It was all wrong. For when Perk and his bride returned to Bowmanville the door was shut and they were told that there was no room for them there.
