TOWN AND COUNTRY.

The woods are very green and fair, And fair and green the glen; And fair, too, is the treeless street That swarms with living men. And beautiful are forest aisles Beneath the centuried oak, And beautiful the chimneys tall That belch with factory smoke

The songs of birds, the low of herds, The hum of bees in June, Chime with the foundry's clash and clank In no discordant tune.

God made the undiscerning earth, The earth it brought forth trees; God also made discerning man, And man made factories; And so the factory and the tree

Are parts of Nature's plan; Both man-made mill and earth-made tree Should please the God-made man. The bobolink's song and the motorman's

Are parts of one refrain; And so is the crash of the cataract, And the rattle of the train.

The cattled hills and the towered town, The wood-path and the alley.
The world-thronged streets whose streams are men, And the rivulet-threaded valley-These all are the equal home of the man Who loves the human brood;

The home of the man who loves the world
And calls the whole world good. The robin's strain in the backwood lane

To this man's ear is sweet;
And so is the rhythmical pulse of the pave With its tread of a thousand feet.

He loves to see the pine tree grow And see the warehouse loom, And see the steamboats throng the wharves And see the buckwheat bloom. For towns grow up beside the streams As oaks grow on the hills,

And mills spring up like growing corn And homes like daffodis.

The breath of the fields its worship yields, Like prayer it rises high; And the smoke from a thousand chimney-

tops
Is incense to the sky. -Sam Walter Foss, in Leslie's Weekly.

JOE.

BY E. L. BROWN. ****

TWENTY-FIVE years ago I taught a school in southern Nebraska, which was only thinly settled in those days. But the few settlers were hardy men and women, living honest lives, and going on slowly but steadily to prosperity, and I had a pleasant time among them.

My schoolhouse was a very primitive affair indeed. It was small, unpainted and unplastered, but had a good floor and fairly comfortable seats; and my pupils, of whom there were 22, were mostly hearty, wholesome boys and

One warm day in spring I opened the windows and doors to let in the genial sunshine and was busy with my classes, when in walked a strange boy, whom I had never seen in the neighborhood.

He was thickly freckled, had red hair, and was poorly dressed, but was very clean. He came directly to my desk. "May I come to school, teacher?" he asked, looking at me earnestly. "Where do you live, my boy?" I questioned. "Just back here by the edge of the woods," he replied. "What is your name?" I asked. "Joe Morton," said he; adding: "We just moved here." Well, Joseph," said I, "you may come to school. "Come this afternoon, and bring all your books."

A bright look came into his face as I said this, but he made no reply, and went out as anceremoniously as he came.

He made a queer picture as he went down the aisle. His clothing was dered. patched, his coat was too big for him, and he carried a large, ragged hat in his hand. But he held up his head in a Joe Morton was good and manly, and I that locality.

resolved to help him all I could. I was afraid he might not have a very pleasant time with a certain few of the given to making fun of any new-comer, and sometimes made it very unpleasant for a boy who seemed odd or strange to

The leader of this set was Tom Atherton, a bright boy, but one who had very little kindly feeling for any one in school, excepting his little sister Pearl.

Pearl Atherton was about seven years old and the most beautiful child I have ever seen. Tom loved her with a love that was almost worship; but to the rest of the pupils he was something of a tease and a torment, always teasing and making fun of some one, and sometimes in a most thoughtless, unkind

I had many serious talks with him on the subject, but as soon as he was out of the schoolroom, he seemed to forget, and went back to his old ways.

As Joe went down the aisle I glanced at Tom, and saw that his eyes were twinkling mischievously, which I was sure boded no good to Joe, but thought he would be able to defend himself.

In the afternoon Joe came, and, after I had assigned his lessons, took his seat quietly.

At recess I heard Tom's voice singing

"I know a boy whose name is Joe, With boots all out at the toe, toe, toe.' I heard no answer from Joe, and soon Tom said, mockingly: "What am I offered for the hat? Bid quick! The only one left that came out of the ark! How much am I offered? Who'll make it one dollar? Who'll make it one dollar?" And so it went from day to day. Tom saying unkind, jeering things as soon as he supposed himself out of sight, and Joe taking it quietly. Sometimes a quick flush would pass over his face, and his lips would quiver, but no word escaped him.

and his everyday life showed strength of character. I could always depend on him to tell the truth on every occasion, and looking into his earnest face, I would forget the baggy clothes, the flery red hair, and the ragged hat.

Not far from the schoolhouse was a wide, deep stream of water, which ran dank and turbid in the spring. It was crossed by a footbridge with a railing on both sides. Nearly half the children crossed this bridge to get to school.

On pleasant days we often sat on the bank to eat our dinner, which we brought with us.

One lovely day in early June, we were seated there, after eating our dinner. I 086,968. was reading a book, and the children were amusing themselves in various Pearl Atherton strolled alone across the bridge, to look for violets, which sometimes grew on the opposite side.

In coming back, she stopped in the middle of the bridge, threw some leaves into the water, and leaned against the railing, watching them as they floated

The railing was old and in some manner had become so loosened that it gave way with her weight, and, with a piercing cry, she went down and out of sight.

Tom stood upon the bank, white and speechless, with a look of agony I shall never forget. He could not swim, and so could never reach her.

But at the first cry Joe had stripped off his coat, and in a minute plunged in and swam steadily toward the spot where the little golden head went down.

He grasped her as she rose to the surface the second time, raised her head out of the water, and slowly swam with her to the bank. When I took her from his arms, and laid her upon the grass, the beautiful face was white and still, but she had been in the water such a short time that a vigorous rubbing soon made her open her eyes and speak to us, and she was soon talking in her usual manner.

We wrapped her up as well as we could, and sent her home with a neighbor who was passing in a wagon.

Joe ran home, changed his clothes, and came back none the worse for his wetting. After the bell rang I missed Joe and Tom from their seats. The back door was ajar and I looked

There stood Tom with tears in his eyes, holding both Joe's hands.

"Can you ever forgive me?" he was saying. "I have been too hateful for anything, but I'm awfully sorry, Joe. If you'll forgive me I 'll be a better fellow after this. If Pearl had been drowned I don't know what I would have done. Oh. Joe! I thought I would die when I saw her go under the water. I can't ever thank you enough."

"I don't want any thanks," said Joe, putting his hand on Tom's shoulder. 'It is all right. I was glad to do it. Don't say anything more about it,

From that day Tom was a different boy. He was quiet and kind with the other pupils, and he and Joe were fast friends. He grew earnest and manly from seeing Joe's honest, upright life.
