ever been gathered together for such a purpose. Seven times during her reign has Queen Victoria's life been attempted. But only one occasion, in May, 1850, did her majesty receive any actual injury, and that of a mere transitory character. Her assailant on that occasion was a dismissed officer of Hussars, and he was setzed before he had time to accomplish more than strike her a sharp blow in the face with a stick. The man was sentenced to seven years' transportation. The first attempt to assassinate her was made in June, 1840, by a man named Oxford, who fired two pistol shots at her while she was driving up Constitution hill with her husband. The would be murderer was seized, detained several years in prison and is now earning his livelihood by house painting out in Remarkable Grace and Majesty. Queen Victoria was small in stature and during the latter part of her life very stout. This, however, did not prevent her from retaining a most remarkable grace and majesty of deportment. It was impossible to conceive anything more captivating and winning than her smile. Always plainly and even shabbily dressed in black impossible not to feel when in her presence that that little old woman had ruled for more than half a century over the greatest and most extensive empire of the civilized globe, and with all that a true, warm hearted woman, full of tenderness, a broad minded, unaffected piety, and of sincere sympathy for all that are in trouble or distressed-a thoroughly human empress, in fact, whose affections. thoughts and utterances were understood and appreciated at their true value by her subjects.

Coming to a throne tarnished by the immoralities of her predecessors, Queen Victoria completely reformed the moral atmosphere of the court, and to a certain extent also of the entire British people. For notwithstanding all the epithets that are hurled against it, British society is today infinitely superior in morals as well as in honor to what it was previous to 1837. Vice there is and always will be in a metropolis so large as London, in a society so elastic and accessible as that of England. But vice is no longer so rampant, so unblushing and so public as in days of yore.

Her reign has been essentially one of peace, and with the exception of the Crimean campaign in 1854-5 England remained aloof from all the great wars that brought havoc and desolation all over the great continent of Europe during her long reign. The latest months of her life, however, were saddened by the conflict in the Transvaal.

The Queen's Conscientiousness. Another popular trait of Queen Victoria, and one that has been especially appreciated by the English, was her scrupulous exactitude and conscientiousness in money matters. All her predecessors on the throne had both lived and died overwhelmed with debts, which parliament was called upon to defray and settle. No appeal of this kind was ever made by Queen Victoria to the national treasury, and not only does she go down to the grave free of debts and leaving an independent fortune to her children, but, moreover, she has taken the trouble to pay off all the private liabilities incurred by her father, the late Duke of Kent.

The latter was perpetually in financial difficulties, which contributed greatly to embitter his life. So small were his resources, indeed, that had it not been for Sir Benjamin Wood advancing him a large sum of money Queen Victoria's birth, on May 24, 1819, would have taken place, not in the London palace at Kensington, but in some obscure Continental town or village. Had this occurred the Duke of Kent's daughter would probably have been prevented from exercising her rights of succession to the British crown. For it is part and parcel of the unwritten constitutional law of England that the heir to the throne should be born on British soil, and the Tory party, at the time of King William IV's death, was strongly in favor of proclaiming George III's fourth son, Ernest, duke of Cumberland, as sovereign in lieu of Princess

CREEK INDIANS THREATENING.

Their Leader Sends a Message of Defiance to the President.

Muskogee, I. T., Jan. 23.-Washington authorities have been requested to send federal troops into the Creek country to quell the uprising of fullbloods known as the Snake bands, who are creating depredations west of Eufala and threatening the lives of both the whites and the neutral Indians. The Indians threaten to enter the towns and burn and kill, and Chief Mekke has sent a message of defiance to President McKinley, as follows:

"Sir: I have already informed you of the matter concerning the execution of the Creek laws. I am now executing my own laws, as I told you I would.

The whites are arming, and serious bloodshed is feared. United States Marshal Bennett sent 20 deputies and ten Indian police to the scene, but they were met by so fierce a fusillade that they were compelled to retire. One of the posse, named McNac, was captured by the Indians, and it is feared that they will take his life

The Irrepressible Mrs. Nation.

Withita, Kan., Jan., 22.—Mrs. Carrie Nation and four other W. C. T. U. women wrecked two saloons last night, doing $1,500 to $2,000 damage. Mrs. Nation afterward made a vicious assault on Sheriff Simmons, who finally landed her and her companions in jail. Today they were released on bail. Tonight Mrs. Nation started on another smashing crusade, but the saloonists closed their places until after she had left for Newton.

BIG THEATER AFLAME.

But the Coolness of the Audience Prevented a Holocaust.

NOT THE LEAST EXCITEMENT.

The Crowded Audience Dispersed as Quietly as Though the Performance Had Been Safely Ended, and All Escaped Without Injury.

Cincinnati, Jan. 23.-The Grand Opera House is a total ruin except for its staunch outer walls. A display of coolness, perhaps never witnessed before under such trying conditions, prevented its loss from being attended by a fearful catastrophe. The play set for last night was "Hamlet," by the E. H. Sothern company. The house was packed by a brilliant audience, many ladies without escorts being present. The first act had been finished, and in the second Mr. Sothern, acting the part of Hamlet, had spoken but a few lines when a slight disturbance was observed in the fourth row of seats gowns that were often rusty, it was from the orchestra, near the center aisle. It was caused by a slight issue of smoke at that point. An usher went down the aisle and quietly asked the people to be seated, saying there was nothing wrong. Mr. Sothern at this point stepped to the front of the stage and also assured the audience that everything was right. To further remove apprehension Mr. Sothern resumed his part, but before he had spoken two lines the smoke issued in such volumes that there was a spontaneous movement of the people in its vicinity.

Without further order or suggestion or advice one of the most remarkable scenes ever witnessed in a crowded audience took place. It was as though the whole situation had been revealed to every person in the house, and without a single shout or anything else indicating a leader, the dispersal of the audience began and was carried out with the utmost order and composure. In the lower part of the house the abundant passage to Vine street gave an easy egress to the greater part of the audience. A large number of persons seated near the orchestra were assisted by the actors and actresses to mount the stage and to make their exit by the stage door on Longworth street. This assistance by the company was rendered at the cost of an entire neglect of their own personal property.

A gentleman who was seated in the fourth row from the orchestra in describing the exit of the audience said there were many women near him without escorts, who exhibited the utmost composure and took the best and safest way to reach a place of safety. Nothing to indicate the possibility of a panic occurred. Fortunately, the gallery, which has the least commodious means of exit, was not crowded, and those who were in that part of the theater escaped with no severe accidents. Here and there some one stumbled on a steen stairway, but ready help was rendered and there was no one trampled or hurt by any mad careering of panic stricken men. The same calmness marked the behavior of the people in the balconies, which were emptied as quietly as if the play had been ended.

The loss to the theater building, on which there is no insurance, is esti-mated at $200,000, while other losses will foot up $100,000 more.
