Henry Comer, a veteran of 5th Pennsylvania reserves Co. E, four years ago lost his eyesight, since then he has been stone blind. In order to draw his mind away from his troubles, made himself a rocking chair, of old and rough lumber with headrest and double arms, arms and headrest being upholstered. Tommy Taylor found a spot of mineral on the mountain just below town; gathered some, bringing it along home with him, gave Henry some to paint his chair with. He ground it, mixed it with oil, painted his rocker a brown color. Tommy painted a block with the same mixture, tried it with fire, finding the block where he did not paint burned freely, but where the paint was on the block, the fire would not burn, making it a fire-proof paint. A portion of the material was given to John P. Harris, as the material was discovered on the Thomas' estate. Mr. Harris, it is said, sent it to State College to be analyzed.
