A few nice ones were caught, and some had a half dozen and over, big and not so big. The stream running through town is not in good condition for trout, being too high and cloudy. A boy caught a 14 inch trout below the breast of the dam above the fair ground. On Elk creek above Millheim there were some fine trout caught, 10 to 12 inches, but the number was not in the dozens. On the stream opposite the toll gate, where the late Adolph Miller resided, we are reliably informed a fisherman caught a twenty-three inch rainbow trout. At the head of Penns creek the number of fishermen was great, but the number of fish caught few in the average. There were some fine speckled beauties taken however. In the mountain streams the catches were not of the brag order on account of the high and swift streams and cold weather. Frank Bradford is said to have caught 40 on Panther and Swift runs. Other fishermen in the Paddy Mountain region had but scant luck.

PART I The Grandmothers of Bellefonte are having a picnic at Hecla Park, when the grandfathers come to visit them. They finally go to the banquet, when Senator Burns, who is late, gets lost from the party and, being very old and lame, sits down and goes to sleep. He dreams that a wizard and his witches come to see him, and agree to make all the old young again if Senator Burns will allow his daughter to become old in their stead. The little girl, who loves her father dearly, consents to do this; so all the old are transformed to youth again. The young grandmothers and grandfathers get into all kinds of trouble, but all rejoice that they are young again. The old folks return to Bellefonte and find Senator Burns asleep. They awaken him and he is greatly surprised to find that it was all a dream.
