Spring Mills.

On Wednesday of last week, quite a large company of ladies and gentlemen assembled at the famous Penn Cave by invitation, to witness the experiment of illuminating the interior by the new acetylene light. Among the invited guests I noticed Mr. Gateman, Mrs. E. Joseph and Miss Wallace, of New York, Mrs. Katz, of Bellefonte, Dr. Jones, of Sunbury, Mrs. Dr. Frank, Mr. and Mrs. Fiedler and Mrs. Porter, of Millheim, Michael and Samuel Ream, of Lock Haven, and others whose names I fail to recall. Besides these guests Spring Mills was largely represented. Mr. Porter, of Sober & Porter, the inventors of the light assisted by J. Frank Reardon, general agent, had previously made every arrangement to avoid any delay or disappointment. The generator was placed in the flat boat used to convey visitors through the cave, with twelve burners attached, when all the seats in the boat were occupied the burners were lighted and the party started on their journey through the cavern. The scene was like fairy land. The interior was almost as light as day.

Defness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflammation of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Good State to Live or Die.

The Pennsylvania farmers who are said by railroad officials to be disposing of their possessions here and moving to the still unoccupied lands in the West ought to think twice before pulling up stakes.

Undoubtedly it is as much easier to farm there, as it is easier to farm in Pennsylvania than in the Vermont and New Hampshire hills, but is an easy life everything that is to be considered? With growing children there is the question of education to be taken into account, and is quite as important as the mere question of an additional dollar or two to what we leave when we die. There is the question of climate, too, and that of surroundings. The prairie lands are mighty monotonous.

Indeed, if the subject is considered in all its phases, the intelligent reasoner will not experience much difficulty in reaching the conclusion that Pennsylvania is a good enough State for the best of men to live in, and, when their time comes, to die is also.—Phila. Inquirer.

Fine Timber.

A Clearfield correspondent of the Williamsport Gazette and Bulletin figures out that Lock Haven market will have next spring the biggest run of timber rafts in many years. The correspondent says: "There is a tract of timber not many miles above Clearfield—the writer saw it within the past month—containing 2,500,000 feet of white pine, some hemlock and red and white oak, on which the sound of the woodman's axe has not yet been heard. Many of the tall pines, monarchs of the forest, are from three to four feet in diameter, and towering upwards to a height of more than a hundred feet. This tract of timberland is in the neighborhood of others, for the purchase of which negotiations are now pending. If the sales are consummated some of the finest spar and square timber rafts will go down the river next spring that have been seen on the Susquehanna for years."

Gypsy Queen Dead.

Leffie Smith, 91 years old, the virgin queen of the gypsy tribes of Pennsylvania, died at Hollidaysburg, Thursday morning, 17th. She was born near Mt. Holly, N. In her youth she was a great beauty, but spurned offers of marriage, because of the peculiar gypsy law that forbids marriage by the rulers of the tribe.

She was a fortune teller, Chauncey Depew being one of her notable patrons in securing revelations of future events. The remains were lying in state in the Hollidaysburg camp attended by 53 subjects. They were taken to Baltimore for interment.

FARMING ON A BATTLEFIELD.

We mentioned the fact in our last issue of the Democrat that J. B. Solt, formerly a resident of Centre Hall, who left that place about a dozen years ago, was at present occupying a farm house on the Gettysburg battlefield. From some of the members Co. B, we learn that our boys were camped just back of the buildings occupied by Solt, and occupied their tents before he became aware that Centre county boys were so close to him. Jake, as we called him, pays the government a money rent for 150 acres of the battlefield land, on which he does some farming. His tract lies to the right of the Devils Den and on the edge of the historic wheat field. The rent is $150 per year. He has now occupied it several years, and has gathered a large quantity of relics of the battle—bullets, pieces of shells, broken guns, etc.—which he finds ready sale for, and keeps up the stock by finding such right along as he turns the ground for farming. The noted wheat field has never been farmed since the battle, and Mr. Solt has obtained permission from the government to farm the field. In plowing it he will find innumerable relics, no doubt, and have sale for them at good prices. The house which he occupies is full of marks, bullets, pieces of shells, and at one place there is an entire shell sticking in the timbers. The house was used as a hospital during the fight, and one of its rooms was used for surgical operations and the floor is stained all over with gruesome bloodspots from the work that surgeons performed; the bloody stains are still to be seen, and hundreds of visitors to the battle field annually go to see the room, paying an admittance of 10 cents, since the number of callers is so large that it required the entire time of one of the family to show it to visitors. Our boys found the best of treatment from Jake, who was as glad to see him as he was to see the company from his native county.
