

AIR AND WATER.

A Simple Home Experiment That Is Interesting and Instructive.

With a dish of water, an ordinary glass lamp chimney and a little sheet of rubber any boy can demonstrate, first, that what we call an empty thing is not empty; second, that air is compressible; third, that air is elastic, and, fourth, that air has weight.

The first thing to do is to put the chimney into the water and let it stand with the small end resting on the bottom of the dish. You will see that the water rises as high in the chimney as it is in the dish. Now take the chimney out and tie the sheet of rubber over its large end. Then put the small end straight down in the water again, and you will see that the water does not rise in the chimney as high as it is in the dish. There is evidently something in the chimney that keeps the water from rising. You will even notice that the rubber sheet bulges up a little. But make a pinhole in the rubber, and you will feel air coming out of it. The chimney was full of air, then, and the water could not get in for that reason.

Now put the chimney, closed at the large end with the rubber, down a little way in the water, and you will see that a small quantity of water will enter. Press it down farther, and more water will enter. This shows that the air in the chimney is compressible.

Raise the chimney a little, and some of the water will leave it, and the more you raise it the more water will leave. This proves that the air that you have compressed in the upper part of the chimney resumes its original volume when the pressure is taken off; therefore, air is elastic. You can pump air into your bicycle tire until the compression is so great that the tire will become about as hard as a stone; but if you let one half the air out the half that is left will fill the tire, because it is elastic.

Now, to show that air has weight, close the large end of the chimney with the rubber sheet—and in all these experiments you must tie the rubber so closely around the chimney that it is perfectly airtight—and lay the chimney down lengthwise in the water until it fills. Then raise it carefully, so that the open end remains under water, and stand it up in the dish. You will see that the water is a good deal higher in the chimney than it is in the dish. What keeps it up there?

To find this out make a pinhole in the rubber so that the air can enter the chimney above the water, and the latter will slowly fall until it stands on a level with the water in the dish. This proves that the weight, or pressure, of the air on the water in the dish keeps the water up in the chimney. It is on this principle that the barometer is constructed, though mercury is used in it instead of water.

On the Floors of the Sea.

Besides being a vast gold mine and salt mine, the ocean is also a great iron mine. To get out the salt in the ocean waves is easy enough—all that is required is evaporation—but to extract the gold from sea water is a feat that has never yet been successfully performed, though everybody knows that there is plenty of gold there if it can be got at.

Every year, however, large quantities of iron are brought up from the ocean depths. Ships are constantly going about losing anchors and chains or getting wrecked on lee shores, where the waves pound them to pieces and scatter their ironwork far in the brine, or perhaps the ship goes down in a storm or is burned for from land and her ironwork dropped into the waters. If it is an iron ship which is lost, her contribution to the ocean iron mine is all the greater. So tons and tons of iron lie all over the ocean floors, the property of any one who shall come along and mine it from "the hollow caves of sea."

A Gentle Boy.

He never does a rude, rough thing,
My papa, kind and true,
I look at him and think inside,
"I'd like to be like you."

My grandma watches when he goes
And says to me and Nan,
"There, children; look and you will see
A real, true gentleman."

I know I am too small for folks
To call me that just yet,
But if I try, oh, very hard,
And never scold or fret

I can be—well, a gentle boy,
And make my papa glad
That I belong to him and am
His own, own little lad!

HEAVIER CLOTHES FOR MEN

OVERCOATS, SUITS, HATS, SHIRTS, AND ALL KINDS OF CLOTHING.

COPYRIGHT 1902 BY A. S. KIRSCHBAUM & CO.

Black and Oxford Overcoats answer for dress as well as business and are liked by all conservative men.

The $10, 12.50 and 15.00 kinds are well tailored, having hand-sewed collar and lapels, and you may have them silk-lined or silk to the edge.

Other Black Overcoats for as little as $7.50 or for as much as $25—that fine black Vicuna at $20 is in a class all by itself.

Covert Overcoats—a full line ready now. $7.50 to 15.00.

Fall Suits—more here now than we usually have in October. $7.50 to 22.50.

Men's Clothes to Measure— for those men who like to have their clothes individual, and who like to select for themselves.

The fall and winter cloths are beautiful, whether you want plainest or most novel effects. Some new things are in plaids an stripes, well mixed with brown, gray and olive tints; plain goods are rich blacks, blues and grays.

There is very wide selection in $20, 22 50 and 25 00 Suitsings.

Black and Blue Cheviot at $15.00, 18.00 and 20.00.

A fine, unfinished Black Worsted at $20.00 for a Sack Suit; usually $25.00, but we bought this cloth most advantageously, and pass the price gain along to our customers.

An Overcoat, silk-lined, at $20 00, is another special garment we are able to offer; usually it would be $25.00 to $30.00.

Men's Scarfs, 25c. and 50c—another fresh lot to-day in staple stripes and figures—the best we have had this season. Fine looking Scarfs that can be worn as a four-in-hand or in the large puff shape. The pick of a good line of silks, and very unusual at 50c. and 25c.

The new Shirts for Fall at 50c.

and $1 are so fine and dignified that men who expected to pay $1.50 or more will keep the 50c. in their pockets. They are comfortable shirts as well, and the material will give a good account of itself in the laundry.

(A good variety of patterns at both ends of the store, $1 and 50c.)
