

FIRE PICTURES.

A Pretty Trick With Which to Puzzle Your Young Friends.

This is a very pretty trick, especially If it is performed in a darkened room. You show your friends a blank sheet of paper (the room must be light enough to let them see that it is blank). Then you strike a match, blow it out and touch the paper with the glowing top of the match. A spark travels over the paper, following a very crooked course, and finally goes out. Then you open the shutters or turn up the lights, and, behold, you see on the sheet of paper a burnt picture or design, which has been traced by the spark.

The secret of the trick is that the paper, though it appears blank, has really had the picture drawn on it beforehand. It is not drawn with pencil or pen and ink, but with a fine brush, a pen or a pointed stick dipped in a very strong solution of saltpeter. The white wrapping paper is a good kind. The solution is colorless and leaves no stain, though the picture is really all the slices nearly as quickly as you there, drawn in saltpeter. Now, saltpeter, which is also called niter and potassium nitrate, is, as you may know, one of the ingredients of gunpowder, and it is used in making powder for the same reason for which we use it in this trick-because it contains a great deal of oxygen and is easily decomposed. When gunpowder explodes, the oxygen from the saltpeter combines with, or burns, the sulphur and charcoal, so that no air is needed from outside. Just so the saltpeter makes the paper easier to light and burn along the lines of the drawing. By the way, these lines should be all connected together. If a part of the picture is entirely separate from the rest it will be "left out in the cold." Of course, you must apply the match to one of the lines, which you can do easily enough by moving it across the paper near where you know there are some lines until the spark catches.

Korean Seesaw.

Korean girls are fond of playing at seesaw. A bag full of sand about a foot in thickness is placed on the ground. Across this is placed a plank, and stretched alongside at a proper height for the children to grasp and steady themselves by it a rope. The young Koreans do not sit down as English or American girls would do, but stand erect on the ends of the plank. One gives an upward spring and as she alights on the board gives the other a skyward toss, who as she alights in turn throws the first girl aloft a little higher. And so the sport goes on until in their upward flight each girl is thrown two or three feet into the air. Frequent rests are necessary, but the pastime is the occasion of much merriment.

One often hears complaints that the wash boiler rusts and iron molds the clothes. This may be easily prevented by rubbing the boiler directly it is emptied and while still warm with any good household soap. Give it a good coating of soap, for the soap will not only prevent rust, but will help to make the suds when the boiler is filled for the next washing day.

There is nothing to hinder a man from asking a girl for her photograph. Sometimes the man doesn't make the request because he would value the picture in any exclusive way. He asks in order to find out if the girl will give it to him, to discover whether she is foolish or wise concerning the protection of her photograph from common possession. The wise girl doesn't give her picture to a man unless she is engaged to him or unless he is included in ber kindred. It sometimes happens that a man shows a girl's picture to other men and meantime makes a flippant remark that would rouse her resentment if she might hear the echo. It is best for a girl to take no chances of having her pictures subjected to common gaze and recklessly criticised.
