MISS ANNA WEBB.

An Indiana Woman Who Is an Expert In Her Business.

Ind., is one of the few women millers of the country and the only one in Indiana who gives her personal attention to every detail of the business, being her own bookkeeper, assisting in weighing grain, sacking flour and meal and traveling through the community calling upon the trade.

left as a heritage to his widow and family the little town mill. A brotherin-law volunteered to take hold of the business, but, being unfamiliar with that line of work, he was unable to keep the mill up to its standard, and the daughter of the dead miller came to the rescue, taking sole management. Her success has been pronounced. The little mill has risen to the dignity of a fifty barrel roller mill, with all modern machinery and new equipment, and all mortgages have been removed. Miss Webb is a charter member of the Indiana Millers' association and is secretary of the Madison county division. At a recent meeting of the Indiana Grain Dealers' association she was admitted to honorary membership. She is the youngest mill manager in the state. Though besieged by newspaper men and magazine writers, she modestly expresses her desire to remain "out of print," and consented to have the accompanying photograph taken only after much persuasion.

The stems were brought together as if tied, and on either side of the simulated tying two slits were cut in the linen and buttonholed. White ribbon was run through the buttonholed slits and tied in a smart bow with ends. A frill of heavy Florentine lace edged the cover.

How to Save Coal.

The following uses up the debris which accumulates in every household and is at the same time a good way of using up quantities of waste paper. Put the paper into a pail of water, let it steep a little, then squeeze into loose balls. Place these on a clear, low fire of cinders (or coke will answer). On the balls throw coal dust mixed with cinders. Leave the fire untouched for hours. When poked it lights up into a warm, glowing fire. This is a splendid way when a fire has to be kept all the pig. night.

With a dash he went between the man's legs and upset him on the ground. Then Mr. Pig ran into the melon patch and picked out a good, red, ripe melon and ate it, while the man got up and brushed off his clothes and went home .- Atlanta Constitution.

Have you heard about Little Bruin and how he saved the honey? No? Well, I guess that is because it only happened the other day.

His grandfather promised him that if he were a good bear and kept his paws clean for a week he should go with him to gather honey, and that if he helped well he should have a jar.
