Carnegie's Plan to Prevent Future Wars

Two great gatherings at the "Hub of the Universe" have challenged the attention of thinking men and women at the same time and both with high aims. Especially of worldwide import was the assembling of the thirteenth international peace congress in Tremont temple, Boston, Oct. 3, not merely because an appeal to end the war in the east was there issued to all the leading nations, but because a new and powerful impulse toward a permanent world peace was given.

The inception of this movement was in a letter to the congress from Andrew Carnegie (now at his Scotch castle, Skibo), suggesting that the United States take the initiative in getting the leading nations to agree to prevent appeals to war. He thinks that if a body of prominent men of each nation urged such a co-operation the idea would soon spread. The letter created great enthusiasm, as did also the announcement that Britain and Austria were about to conclude a treaty of arbitration. In Trinity church, Boston, Oct. 5, the general convention of the Episcopal church began sessions which were expected to result in legislation vitally affecting the American church. Archbishop Davidson, the British primate, brought greeting from the mother church and expressed the opinion that the paramount necessity of the moment was the need of religion in the home life of the people, which he ad-
