The University of Virginia, at Charlottesville, which was founded by Thomas Jefferson eighty years ago, entered upon a new era of expansion April 13 with the inauguration of Edward A. Alderman as its president. Hitherto the institution has been governed by a board of regents. The great feature of the day, aside from the inaugural ceremonies, in which twenty-three college presidents and high state officials took part, was the announcement that John D. Rockefeller had of-
