Owing to the water in Spring creek being too low to keep in constant operation the pump at the new Phoenix mill station the old water works pump has been in operation the past week or so. That is copied from the Daily News which is afraid to tell the truth. Water is not so low, but the new pump had to be stopped and sent to the machine shops to undergo costly repairs, due to abuse and neglect in oiling bearings. Tuten knows that, but being a candidate is afraid that the gang who have clustered around the Water works these many years might swipe him at the polls, hence the above apology. Earl, in a case like that better sing mum. While the new pump at the mill was being repaired, when the cylinders were opened, at the bottom of each there was a lot of iron and brass scrap that the pistons had been pounding around with each stroke. Strange to say it did not break the heavy machine, but it was badly battered. How scrap iron in that quantity and some pieces the size of walnuts found its way into the cylinders is something that needs to be explained. The running of a lot of old sacks into the pump about a year ago put it out of commission then, and this scrap iron may have caused the recent trouble. Will some one explain this condition of affairs? Is anyone trying to queer this pumping station? Does not look exactly right.
